THE SMUGGLER OF ST. JEAN;

OR, THE HIDALGO'S WARD.

STORY OF THE S'ANISH CO AST.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

CHAPTER XX.

Leon Murillo was astir before the sun was up, and if he had followed the dictates of his first and best judgment, he would have aroused Julie, and ordered her to call Estelle and Nina, but he did not do so. He walked out upon the sea-shore, and when he returned he found the hostess up.

'How are your fair guests this morning, Julie?'

'They are both sleeping scundly, Leon. Poor things! they have not had much rest o f late.'

'I wish they were up,' said the lieutenant uneasily. 'I do not feel that they are safe here. I think they had better be called.'

'No, no, Leon,—not yet. You don't know how tired and worn they were when they went to bed last night. It would be cruel to disturb them now. And, beside, what have you to fear so soon? The lady's enemies cannot follow her hither without much search.'

'We don't know about that,' returned Leon, shaking his head. 'The lady's enemies are wicked and unscrupulous, and they may have keener scent than we think for. But you shall have your way for the present. The ladies may rest a while longer.'

While Julie was preparing breakfast Leon walked out again. He noticed this time what he had not noticed before—that a handsome yacht had cast anchor just off the headland; and while he stood and gazed upon her, admiring her beautiful proportions, a boat was lowered from her stern, into which stepped half a dozen men, four of whom took oars and pulled for the shore One man got out from the boat, the others immediately returning to the yacht; and Leon was not a little surprised when he discovered that the man who had landed was his own commanded.

'Good morning, lieutenant,' was Bertrand's salutation, as he approached our hero.

'And a good morning to thee,' responded Leon. 'But tell me: What is the meaning of this? What new craft have you out there?'

'That is not mine, though I wish it was,' replied the chieftain, with a smile. 'It belongs to a friend of mine who has come to visit me on business.'

'On business?' repeated Leon interrogatively.

'Yes, but you must not be inquisitive now. You shall know ere long what his business is. And now let us go in and see if Julie has something for us to eat. Are the ladies moving yet?'

'They were not when I came out. They were worn and weary when they retired, and Julie thought they had better sleep.'

With this the two men turned towards the cot, and when they entered they found Estelle and Nina up, looking bright and refreshed. The lady gave her hand first to Bertrand, and when she had received his congratulations she turned towards Leon. He was not jealous because she had given to the captain her first salutation, for when she put forth her hand to him the lovelight that irradiated her whole face beamed upon him so warmly and so brightly that he could only find room in his bosom for absorbing love and for devout gratitude to Heaven for the blessing thus vouchsafed to him.

In a little while the hostess announced breakfast, and Bertrand nodded approvingly when he saw how keenly Estelle relished her food. The meal had been finished, and Julie had just arisen from the table, when they were startled by the tramp of horses feet without. Bertrand and Leon hurried to the window, and beheld at least a score of horsemen surrounding the cot. They saw the alcalde, and they saw several of the chief officers of the police force of Denia

'Madre de Dios!' gasped Leon, turning pale and trembling from head to foot. Not for himself—never for himself—but for one whom he loved better than himself did he tremble.

'They have tracked us! O, I feared this.

'Courage, Leon. All is not yet lost,'

'And what can save us?' demanded the youth, clutching the hilt of his dagger.

'Flight is impossible, and resistance would be worse than useless.'

By this time Estelle and Nina had come to the window, and when they saw the armed men gathering about the house, with Don Bernardo directing them, they were stricken with mortal fear.

'Hush, and listen to me,' spoke Rafael Bertrand, moving back from the window as though he would not be seen by those without. 'It is as has been said,—flight is impossible, and resistance would be worse than useless. You, Leon, and the two ladies, must give yourselves up. There is no help for it. But I must not be found. Fear not, for as sure as God liveth, I will bring you speedy succor. I will conceal myself, and when you are gone I will come forth and collect a host that shall bring such condemnation upon yonder wicked hidalgo as will cause him to wish that he had never beheld the light of this day. Trust all to me—trust all to me—and you shall not be deceived. Sweet lady, you dream not yet of the blessings which are in store for you. Give yourself up willingly; and if you are taken to San Martin, be sure that I will be there almost as soon as you are. And now leave me to take care of myself. You know not whither I am going, so you can give the alcalde no information concerning my whereabouts'

With this Bertrand hurried from the apartment, and shortly afterwards Don Bernardo, followed by a dozen of his armed police, entered by the front way. He had a drawn sword in one hand, and a pistol in the other; but when he saw that only three women and one man occupied the room, and that even they gave no sign of resistance, he put away his weapons.

'Carajo!' he muttered, scowling savagefirst upon Estelle and then upon Leon, 'and so I have found you! You, lady, and your maid, will return with me to San Martin; and you, sir,' turning to Leon, 'are my prisoner. My men seize and bind him.'

Leon Murillo moved into a corner of the room, and drew a pistol from his bosom.

'Hold,' he cried, with a bearing so imposing and a look so determined, that the advancing soldiers fell back. 'I yield myself a prisoner; but I must not be bound. I have committed no crime, and your shackles shall not be put upon me. I will go with you quietly if you leave me to go as I am.'

The chief of the police, who was himself a brave man, and who could respect true bravery in others, suggested that the young man should be allowed to go with his limbs free; and as he thus spoke, his followers, all of whom had witnessed the young man's wonderful feat at the Plaza de Toros, put up their arms, and retired towards the door.

Don Bernardo saw at a glance how matters stood, and swallowing his vengeful feelings as best he could, he announced that the prisoner might go without the bonds. He was strongly inclined to say something severe to his fair ward; but when he noticed the calm, defiant look with which she regarded him, he concluded not to awaken her tongue in the presence of the officers; so he had horses brought to the door as quickly as possible, and ere long the party were off. Julie had not been molested, and no questions had been asked concerning Rafael Bertrand.

Straight to San Martin they rode, the horses being allowed to walk more than half the distance along the forst path; and when they had arrived at the castle the sun had almost reached its meridian height. Without delay the party dismounted, and were led by the alcalde to the great hall where, in the years agone, it had been the custom of the hosts of San Martin to serve up banquets to both peasants and noblemen Estelle and Nina were sent to their chamber and two of the servants were stationed near their door to keep them fast. The policemen and under officers had seated themselves near the door, while Don Bernardo and his chief officer occupied the semi-circle dais at the head of the hall. Leon Murillo, with his arms folded, standing before them.

'Leon Murillo,' spoke the alcalde, after he had whispered a few moments with his companion, 'I had thought some of confining you in one of the cells of the castle; but, upon reflection, I have concluded to turn you over to the jailer at Denia. We will have no examination here, for all present know what cause of complaint I have'

As the hidalgo ceased speaking he made a motion with his hand, and before Leon could comprehend what was coming, he was seized from behind by four stout men, and his arms pinioned ere he could help himself.

'Bernardo d'Acosta,' the youth cried, striving in vain to burst his bonds, 'you have no excuse for this outrage. Beware, Senor, or your cruelty shall fall back upon your own head.'

'Away with him,' commanded the alcalde, 'and if he uses his tongue too much let his mouth be stopped.'

'Hark,' said Fernandez Casto, the chief of police. 'What new arrival is this?'

Don Bernardo started, for at that moment the sound of horses feet fell upon his ears. He sprang to one of the windows, and beheld in the court below, a score of horsemen just dismounting He would have ordered that the prisoner should be taken away, but before he had time to collect his thoughts, the great door was thrown open, and Rafael Bertrand, followed by a dozen of his stout seamen, strode into the hall The first thing which attracted the attention of the Smugglers was their lieutenant, standing in the centre of the hall, with his arms pinioned. Without even a sign from their leader they hurried forward and cast off the bonds.

'My men,' cried the alcalde, starting down from the dais, 'why do ye there idle? Drive these interlopers from our presence'

'Back!' commanded Rafael Bertrand in tones which men used to obey could not disregard. 'For the present, men of Denia, you have another master than the alcalde.'

'Ah, is it thou?' demanded Don Bernardo sneeringly.

'No. He is coming.'

As Bertrand thus spoke there entered through the open door way, a tall, powerful man, with a long robe of grey cloth enveloping his stately form from head to foot. He advanced to the dais, and gazed around upon the scene than was displayed before him.

'Who art thou?' demanded the alcalde

The man loosed the robe from about his neck, and as the grey cloth fell to the floor, there was left revealed a garb of purple velvet, richly ornamented with gold and precious stones, while a diamond cross, of the order of St. Julian, sparkled upon his breast.

'Padre Santo!' gasped Fernandez Casto, plucking the alcalde by the sleeve, 'It is Philip, duke of Valencia.'

'My lord,' said Don Bernardo, sinking upon one knee, and striving hard to compose himself, 'I bid you welcome to San Martin.'

'Arise, Senor,' returned the duke 'Ere I accept your welcome we will discover, if possible, by what right you extend it. Arise, I say and listen to me.'

The alcalde arose, and glanced his eye towards the door. Perhaps he thought of leaving the hall; but if he did, he had not the courage to make the attempt. Philip of Velencia ascended the dais and spoke to Fernandez Casto:

'You, I think, are chief of this constabulary force?'

'I am, my lord.'

'Then into your charge do I give the alcalde. For the present he is your prisoner and you will hold him here.'

'My lord,' said the hidalgo, trembling in spite of all his efforts, 'do you make me a prisoner in my own domicile?'

'For the present, Senor,' replied the duke, sternly, 'you are a prisoner, and, if I am not greatly misinformed, I have some charges to prefer against you. But there is one who should witness this investigation, that I see not here. Let the Lady Estelle d'Avilla be conducted to our presence.'

One of the servants left the hall, and ere long returned, accompanied by Estelle and Nina. The duke stepped down, and took the maiden by the hand as she advanced.

'Lady,' he said, with a warm, kind smile, 'do you remember me?'

'Yes, yes, she tremblingly answered, as she gazed into his face. 'You were my father's friend. You are the Duke Philip'

'Right dear lady. And now come and sit by my side; and if my actors do not blunder in their parts we shall witness a drama of most absorbing interest. Your attendant may bear you company.'

Thus speaking he led her upon the dais, and seated her by his side; after which he directed that Leon Murillo should take a seat lower down, upon his left hand.

'What did it mean? Why had the alcalde turned so deathly pale, and why did he ever and anon turn his gaze so nervously towards the door, as though he expected to see some ghost enter upon the scene? Only two persons of all there assembled seemed to have the least idea of what was coming One sat upon the dias, speaking some cheering words to Estelle, and the other stood by the door, with his arms folded across his capacious breast, awaiting the will and pleasure of his superior—the Duke of Valencia and the Smuggler chieftain

'Now,' spoke the duke, when all had become quiet, 'let the first witness be summoned. Call Doctor Batista.'

The Most Reliable Friend!

Holloway's Ointment,

Its Searching & Healing Properties are known and recognized throughout the World.

The number of years this invaluable Ointment has stood the test of public opinion, (and the longer known the better appreciated) is a testimony of itself more convincing than anything that could be written in praise of its truly wonderful healing properties In the cure o bad legs, bad breasts, sores, wounds, and ulcers, its effect is marvellous. For ring-worm, scald-head, scrofula, and diseases of the scalp generally, there is no remedy to be compared to it. When assidiously rubbed upon the skin (previously well bathed in warm water this Ointment is quickly absorbed into the system, and cleanses, in its passage, every part to which it is applied.

Glandular Swellings, Mumps Bronchitis, Quinsey, Sore Throats and Diptheria.

In any of the above diseases, immediate and permanent relief is obtained by effectually rubbing this detergent Ointment, twice a day, upon the neck, chest and back Its acts upon the very mainsprings of life; for through the glands pass all new matter required for the body's reparation and all old particles detrimental to its preservation. The Ointment, used conjointly with Holloway's Pills, will act so searchingly and certainly as to effect cures in the most hopeless cases.

Rheumatism, Lumbago, Contracted and Stiff Joints.

Many thousands of martyrs from the above complaints have found life almost unsupportable; yet, if Holloway's Ointment be briskly and perseveringly rubbed upon the parts affected, ease may be safely guaranteed, especially if the pores of the skin by previously opened by fomentations with warm water The gross humors require expulsion from the system; it is therefore necessary to have recourse t Holloway's admirable Pills, which, by purifying and strengthening the system, greatly assist the operation of the Ointment and facilitate and confirm they cure

Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, and Ulcerations of all kinds.

There i no medicinal preparation in the world which may be so thoroughly relied upon, in the treatment of the above ailments, as Holloway's Ointment Nothing can be so simple or safe as the manner in which it is applied, or its action on the body, both locally and constitutionally. The Ointment, rubbed around the part affected, enters the pores just as salt enters meat. It quickly penetrates to the source of the evil and drives it from the system.

Erysipelas and Scrofulous Sores

In all irritations of the skin, sores, ulcers, burns or scrofulous enlargements of any kind, Holloway's Ointment presents a ready and easy means of cure. It manifests a peculiar power in restraining inflammation, removing stagnation, cooling the heated blood, and checking all acrimonious and unhealthy discharge.

Diseases attendant on Childhood.

Diseases incident to early life fall more under the management of the mother than the medicine man Holloway's Ointment should therefore be regarded by her as a "Household Treasure," as it never fails in bringing out the rash in measles and scarlatina; and for the removal of all skin diseases its effect is miraculous In cases of whooping cough and croup, this invaluable Ointment should be rubbed twice a day upon the throat and chest, and the youngest invalid will derive therefrom the most soothing relief. Two or three of Holloway's famous Pills, reduced to a powder, will augment the curative powers of the Unguent.

Both the Ointment and Pills should be used in the following cases:

Bad Legs	Corns (soft)	Rheumatism
Bad Breasts	Cancers	Scald Heads
Burns	Contracted and Stiff Joints	Sore Nipples
Bunions	Elephantiasis	Sore Throats
Bite of Moschetoes and Sand Flies	Fistulas	Skin Diseases
	Gout	Scurvy
Coco-bay	Glandular Swellings	Sore Heads
Chiego-foot		Tumours
Chilblains	Lumbago	Ulcers
Chapped Hands	Piles	Wounds
		Yaws

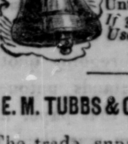
GRAY HAIR.

This is the AMBROSIA that Ring made.

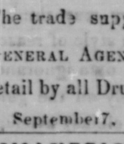
This is the Cure that lay
In the AMBROSIA that Ring made.

This is the Man who was bald and gray,
Who now has raven locks, they say.
He used the Cure that lay
In the AMBROSIA that Ring made.

This is the Maiden, handsome and gay,
Who married the man once bald and gray,
Who now has raven locks, they say.
He used the AMBROSIA that Ring made.



This is the Parson, who, by the way,
Married the maiden, handsome and gay,
To the man once bald and gray,
But who now has raven locks, they say,
Because he used the Cure that lay
In the AMBROSIA that Ring made.



This is the Bell that rings away
To arouse the people sad and gay
Unto this fact, which here does lay—
If you would not be bald or gray,
Use the AMBROSIA that Ring made.
