An Edwardian beauty who was hostess and writer, the Dowager Duchess of Sutherland, and an internationally famous singer Frieda Hempel both belonging to the elegant era, have died recently. Dowager Duchess of Sutherland's death occurred in Biarritz where she was on holiday. Frieda Hempel had returned two months ago to her homeland Germany.

Millicent Fanny, Duchess of Sutherland, married the fourth Duke of Sutherland. He died in 1913. Her second marriage was to the late Brigadier Percy Desmond Fitzgerald of the 11th Hussars, from whom she obtained a divorce in 1919. The same year she married Lieutenant Colonel George Ernest Harvey, who died in 1945. After her death she reverted to the use of her first married title. She was the eldest daughter of the fourth Earl of Rosslyn. She was widely travelled and had lived in France since 1919. The Dowager Duchess was awarded the Croix de Guerre and she founded the Sutherland Technical school for Crater's sons.

Frieda Hempel tall, fair and exquisitely beautiful was the Jenny Canadian Club located in all the larger cities, and most of the bigger towns across Canada; the total membership is 40,000. Mr. and Mrs. W. Storey and their daughters Anne and Patsy have returned from a visit to Portland and Lewiston, Maine.

This is the time of the year in Canada when the various church teas and bazaars are most popular. Britain has long been known for her church bazaars and has been famous as the home of tea-drinkers. When Mrs. Peppy, the diarist's wife, made tea for her cold in 1867 the price approached 10 pounds a pound. In 1906, when Thomas Twining opened his coffee-house in the Strand, he sold tea as well, and the price was about twenty shillings per pound. One of his customers was "Sir C. Wren", and the ledger entry for his purchase still exists. Twining in the Strand sell tea from the same place where the founder of the firm began, over two centuries ago.

Trinity Church Junior W. A. held its annual church supper and bazaar on October the twentieth. Mrs. J. W. McKenzie is the president and Mrs. R. P. Van Alstine convoked the supper and bazaar.

Mrs. Helen Suter spent the Thanksgiving holiday in Saint John, N. B.

The many friends of Mrs. Guy Scott who is a patient in the Charlottetown Hospital, will be pleased to learn she is greatly improved. Her brother Mr. A. F. Curran and Mrs. Curran returned to Ottawa after spending the past three weeks with Mrs. Scott and Miss Lorraine Scott.

Mrs. Basil MacDonald, Mrs. Fred Steele, Mrs. Catherine Creamer, Mrs. Maurice Griffin, Mrs. Mat Lee, Mrs. J. L. MacGuigan and Miss Gertrude Coady returned Wednesday evening after attending National C. W. L. Convention at Moncton, New Brunswick.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

What we wonder has this week done for us? Or more rightly, it comes to mind, what have we done for it? Loved its every golden hour? We remember now how wholly pleasant they were, the days dappled with sunlight, the nights over-hung with stars.

Or perhaps, strange dissatisfied ones that we are, we spoiled, sullied more than one with our complaints, kicking vainly against the briars along our varied ways of life? If we were a hundred miles away from here we said with longing, or if we just had "How many dollars would it take?" how thoroughly happy we should be. And all the time we were in the best place of all and had about us those we most wanted to see: a home set apart, sanctified for our use ... husband, family, loved ones, friends, And the homely or more imposing duties of our round. What bountiful, irreplaceable riches were ours!

At Alderlea, we found lovely and peaceful hours with October suns and stars and breezes giving endearing sights of season about our door. So beautiful now the hills, so pretty the vales. What scenes of week do we especially recall? The creaking of the laden carts, the sound of the hoof-beats of the horses bringing our harvest of mangels to their storing in the cellar. And the pleased smiles, when at length the work of it was done and the farmers satisfied with their savings for stock — and fowls about.

The clearing-fires in a piece of stumpled we recall. They shone like bright jewels in the dark garment of the twilight. And the smoke curling up above the woodland where the English side of James worked with an assistant at lading fence-litter left in a hedge-row. We see to the coal fire of the furrows where the young farmer was at the first of his plowing, a part of the farming which, since horses are no longer used at this at Alderlea, has lost much of its charm to James.

How full of nice memories the week is! Of children at play — black dogs and cats and a laughing black dog. So much there was to love and tuck away. And for background the delights of exquisite October days. Edna Jacques caught the charm of these in her verses:

"You can smell October
In the misty air,
Bonfires in vacant lots,
Blue smoke hanging there.

You can feel October,
In your blood and veins,
Creeping down the little streets,
Hiding in the lanes.

You can see October,
Like a carpet laid
Over all the little fields,
Lovely as brocade.

You can hear October,
Rustling through the town,
Stirring up the crimson leaves,
Bringing ivy down

You can sense October,
In your heart's deep core,
Like a lovely guest who knocks
At your kitchen door

You can taste October,
Sweet as wine and clear,
Brew of all the golden days,
Lived throughout the year."

Until Monday — Diary — Good night ...

MORNING SMILE

Are you always so quiet, Tom my?" asked the visitor.
"No," replied Torney, "but mother has promised me a quartet if I don't say anything about your bald head and red nose."
