ELLEN'S DIARY

Care Of All Animals Is Exemplified At Alderlea

At Alderlea on a night like this, when a wind blows wildly in the treetops and blusters gustily about the eaves, it is good to come abroad to the barns with James, and follow as he settles away his last chores. These are of course, shared with the younger farmer and it is always interesting for us to see how perfectly the two work together to complete the set pattern.

"You haven't seen the summer calves lately, have you, Ellen?" he said preceding us down steps and along a corridor to their stall, where in a company they were cleaning up their supper of hay.

The stables are never cozier than when high winds blow, warmed as they are by breaths and bodies of the animals, so comfortably sheltered within. And reflecting on this, we could heartily agree with James when, shaking another flake of straw on the youngest calf's bed, he offered "I often think Ellen that if a traveller were to be bewildered in a snowstorm, a stable would be a right good shelter to come to."

"Why, they're done well!" we said. "Not bad, are they?" he smiled. "These are only cross-breeds, but they're fair-good in shape, and growthy I'd say. When they get a spell on the grass" he nodded, thinking ahead to the June-time.

Outside the wind blew, not one seasonally edged with frost, nevertheless of Fall cool and gusty, making the indoors seem an oasis of safety and content.

"We like to follow him to that last rite of his round, which takes him to open one after another the shutters in front of the horses and drop handfuls of grain to the mangers. Not hurriedly but taking time to smooth a forehead, or pet a velvet muzzle and chat with each one in turn. And tonight, names of remembered horses came back to our lips—Old Cleveland, . . . the old-mare-of-all . . . the young mare, a comely animal we lost, of whom all, like the years flown, have now vanished into the past.

There is a saying that a farmer's goodness, indeed his religion we have heard an old Minister say, is reflected favorably or otherwise but most obviously in the appearance and attitude of his cats. A pair of ours, silken coated, black as ebony except for the white of their vests emerged softly from the shadows of the group and pressed against James' overalls legs for a word of attention, during a moment's halt there.

"We came then from a world of animals, none anywhere we may say better tended, to the quiet house that is ours. Back to the old clock's tick and the scent of maple sticks burning, to the peace and serenity of a workday's close. . . . When a wind blows wildly in the treetops and blusters gustily about the eaves it is good to come abroad to the barns with James and follow as he settles away his last chores. Until tomorrow — Diary — Goodnight."

HAPPENINGS

Dame Flora MacLeod, who is arriving Monday on Prince Edward Island, is having to leave the province a day earlier than planned. Consequently there has been a change in plans here. It is regrettable that Dame Flora's visit is shortened but there is still a warm welcome and much fine hospitality awaiting her.

The regular meeting of the Charlottetown University Women's Club will be held on Thursday, January 23, at 8 p.m., in the Vocational School.

MARY HAWORTH

Good Sense Heals Rift

Dear Mary Haworth: Recently my husband bought a business and never mentioned any thought of doing so until it was all over. I was, and am, deeply hurt by this, as we always have been so close. We discussed everything. I'll grant you that if he had mentioned it to me, I feel sure that my response would have been to leave it all to his better judgment. But he says now that he "didn't feel that his business was my business."

feeling badly and letting your husband know it. Rather this is a normal outgoing wife's reaction to a beloved husband's sudden switch from sharing behavior to a lone wolf brand of thinking. I see no justification for kicking yourself about your dismay. What the situation calls for is understanding—(1) of the inner meaning of your husband's defiant standoffishness; and (2) of the reasons why you feel emotionally bereft, or hurt, as you say.

New committees appointed were: School committee, Mrs. Leslie Douglas and Mrs. Roland Jay; North side sick committee, Mrs. Bruce Affleck and Mrs. Emmet McKenna and on the south side Mrs. Merton Jardine and Mrs. Arthur MacLaughlin.

If you can grasp the fact that your husband is presently afraid of business failure, and consequent loss of standing with you; and that you are afraid of losing him—of becoming the forgotten woman in his routine—you will begin to come out of the woods in this matter, I think. You can stop feeling hurt, and start using your good common sense, to gradually heal the rift in comradeship. - M. H.

A contest was put on by Mrs. Ernest Affleck was won by Mrs. Bruce Affleck. The handicraft Van will be in Mt. Stewart for ten days beginning January 20, offering courses to all ladies interested.

WHERE TO BUY BOOK
Dear Mary Haworth: In a recent issue of Meats you mentioned that you were afraid of your husband's reaction to your new business. I am not a child in years; but am I being childish in this matter? I am not angry, just plain hurt. Both of us read your column daily and have found them very interesting and helpful. . . . I hope you can find time to give me some needed advice, believe me it will be heeded, even if you tell me to kick myself. Sincerely, - G. S.

WIFE PRESERVERS

The report of the Red Cross convener Mrs. M. MacKay was then given. There is considerable sewing and knitting on hand which the ladies are asked to pick up as soon as possible.

AFRAID OF FEARS

Dear G. S.: Evidently your husband was secretly so unsure of the soundness of this venture that he didn't dare risk any discouraging comment from you. He wanted to try it, so he took the plunge and informed you afterwards. Now he still refuses to discuss it, mainly because of the anxious conflicts in his own mind. He wants to sit on his fears and ignore them—and not let them out in the open, where they might scare him. That is why he says that he "doesn't feel that his business is your business."
