GRACE WELDON.

THE RETROSPECTION.

The instruments he employed to aid him in his conspiracy, were Jack Bells, and a shrewd, depraved lad, who was the illegitimate child of the burglar, who had been recently discharged from the House of Correction, and whom Briggs had undertaken to train in his own career of wickedness.

It was this lad, who went by the soubriquet of 'Little Jack,' who offered the drafts to Mr. Morley. The negro was the burglar himself, disguised by lamp-black and oil so completely, that, with his naturally blunt features, he could not have been detected.

The result of this diabolical conspiracy the reader has already witnessed. He has seen it, skillfully, artfully, deeply, secretly, planned as it was by malice, hatred, envy, and jealousy—he has seen it defeated by the simple resistance of the spotless integrity of its destined victims! This shows the value of character. It proves the incalculable advantages of a good name!

Philip Clow made no reply which he could hear, but as he entered his house to visit Isabel, (whither we have already followed him,) he smiled derisively, and muttered, 'Yes, yes! It is easy for this gay blood, now he has succeeded in his object, to recommend quiet! He fears we may goad the young man to turn upon his foes! He trembles for the consequences of his forgeries. He not I, had the penning of those dangerous papers. I don't fear on that score! He will have to bear the consequences if it is discovered! James Daily is now my victim! I have not done with him! Nor would be done with him if he suspected who had penned the note which has been sent to him. Thanks, Carlton, to thy ignorance! I shall now have the victim all in my own hands! He knows not all the deep motives of revenge I hold against him! I told him of my love for Frederica the bonnet-girl, and that I was actuated by rivalry; but I did not tell him I hated him for coming between me and my ambitious purposes with regard to himself! I could not tell him that without revealing to him that the beautiful opera-singer who has fascinated him, and Philip Clow, the mulatto, are brother and sister. It is not time to make that revelation yet. Wait awhile, till the knowledge of it will make him foam at the mouth with madness! Then will I have my revenge on him, for this man I hate next to Daily! I shall never forget nor forgive the degrading epithets applied to me, for my color and blood, when I have in his need refused to lend him money without suitable security! His pride shall be lowered, high as it carries itself! It was in this mood he sought his sister, the interview between which personages has already been given in the preceding chapter.

We shall now proceed to see how James Daily escapes out of the net that has been laid for him by love and revenge combined, and eventually establishes his own innocence by the overthrow of the guilty. But we defer this denouement of our subject to the next chapter, with which our story will be brought to its termination.

Daily to meet other persons than Clow, Briggs, and himself. All this time, Ellery, he said, had no suspicion that the mulatto had a sister! He could not, therefore, be aware of the secret object she had in view in seeing Daily, or of Clow's combined motives in having the note sent to him. Isabel was acting for herself! Philip Clow was acting for himself! Ellery equally independent of both; yet all three acting towards the same end, and each deceiving the other!

The reader, we trust, will now understand that Carlton Ellery, when he took leave of the fair opera-singer, had no suspicion whatever that the note Philip had shown him, addressed to Daily, inviting him to a certain house to see a lady, was really written by her, or that Daily was to see her in compliance with it, not many minutes after he took his leave. That Daily or she knew of one another's existence, he had not the most distant suspicion! That they were about to meet, and through the agency of a note he had himself read and consented should go to Daily, he as little dreamed of! The note he had believed penned by Philip, assuming, for the purpose, a delicate womanly style of penmanship, on which, it will be remembered, he complimented him. But that the note was to accomplish more than to bring Daily into a trap in which Mr. Weldon might discover him, had no place in his conceptions. He knew the note invited Daily to call at eight o'clock at No. — Dormer Place; but he supposed this, as Clow told him it was, a house in which to be seen would compromise his character with Mr. Weldon. That his 'beautiful Jewess' dwelt in the same house, and that it was only another part of Clow's habitation, he had no idea; and the mulatto, by the secrecy with which he took him there, took precautions that he should have no suspicion of their identity. When, therefore, Ellery took leave of Clow, after they had ridden home from their visit, at the window of the cab, he declined to have anything further to do with Daily's downfall, feeling he could now no farther interfere with his own personal views; and, although aware that the hour was approaching when he might be expected to reply in person to the note sent him, and thrust himself in their power, he chose to proceed to the opera, as we have seen, rather than wait to see him; for the guilty man was, in truth, afraid to meet his victim! If he had suspected that No. — Dormer Place was the house he had just left, and that the 'feigned' female was the fascinating woman he had just left, he would not so calmly and indifferently have left Philip, the mulatto, to take upon himself any further revenge towards the victim of their joint hatred.

If you go to this house in Dormer Place, you spoke of, Philip, he said carelessly, as the cab drove off, and Daily makes his appearance, you had best let him pass, and do nothing. The more quiet we are now the better!

Philip Clow made no reply which he could hear, but as he entered his house to visit Isabel, (whither we have already followed him,) he smiled derisively, and muttered,

'Yes, yes! It is easy for this gay blood, now he has succeeded in his object, to recommend quiet! He fears we may goad the young man to turn upon his foes! He trembles for the consequences of his forgeries. He not I, had the penning of those dangerous papers. I don't fear on that score! He will have to bear the consequences if it is discovered! James Daily is now my victim! I have not done with him! Nor would be done with him if he suspected who had penned the note which has been sent to him. Thanks, Carlton, to thy ignorance! I shall now have the victim all in my own hands! He knows not all the deep motives of revenge I hold against him! I told him of my love for Frederica the bonnet-girl, and that I was actuated by rivalry; but I did not tell him I hated him for coming between me and my ambitious purposes with regard to himself! I could not tell him that without revealing to him that the beautiful opera-singer who has fascinated him, and Philip Clow, the mulatto, are brother and sister. It is not time to make that revelation yet. Wait awhile, till the knowledge of it will make him foam at the mouth with madness! Then will I have my revenge on him, for this man I hate next to Daily! I shall never forget nor forgive the degrading epithets applied to me, for my color and blood, when I have in his need refused to lend him money without suitable security! His pride shall be lowered, high as it carries itself! It was in this mood he sought his sister, the interview between which personages has already been given in the preceding chapter.

We shall now proceed to see how James Daily escapes out of the net that has been laid for him by love and revenge combined, and eventually establishes his own innocence by the overthrow of the guilty. But we defer this denouement of our subject to the next chapter, with which our story will be brought to its termination.

CHAPTER XXV.

CONCLUSION.

With this chapter closes the story with which we have so long been trespassing upon our kind reader's patience. We have much to do in a little space to take care of all our characters, but we trust they will all have due justice done them.

We have said that our hero resolved to accept the invitation contained in the anonymous note which he had received, believing it might come from the female who had addressed the bank in reference to the drafts; which female had, as we know, a fictitious existence. James had suspected indeed that the note to the bank might have been penned by Carlton, but when he received it he believed that then it might really have been written by a woman. Hoping to obtain some clue to the abettors of the plot against him, he determined to go to No. — Dormer Place. A few minutes before eight he rang the bell and was admitted by the young fair-haired slave of the mulatto. From the appearance of luxury in the hall he believed it was the abode of a respectable private family. Giving his name, the young girl at once, as if previously instructed, led him to the upper drawing-room and left him to enter. At first he saw no one, for the apartment was obscure and objects indistinct. He crossed, as Ellery had done, to the door whence the light issued, and was met by Isabel with an enchanting smile upon her features, and eyes brilliant with passionate love.

'I feared you would not come,' he said, with tones that thrilled his bosom, while he gazed upon her with bewildered surprise; for he recognized the dark-eyed sewing-girl in all the voluptuous elegance of her present costume. As she spoke she took his hand and led him as if she would seat him by her upon the ottoman from which she had risen to meet him.

'It was by you then the note came,' she said gravely, and shrinking back; for he felt an instinctive alarm at the position in which he found himself. 'Are you not the same person who—'

passion and to assure you that if you will return it I will lay my life at your feet. Without you I can never exist. With you I seek no happiness beyond this life.'

'You know not what you say,' he said, with astonishment and pain. 'To you I can be nothing. Why did you write to me? How can I serve you, or what interest have you in my honor? Why do I find you here surrounded by luxury?'

'This is my home. I was at the mantua-maker's but a few days to please one who has control over me.'

THE CHEAPEST AND SAFEST DOCTOR.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

THIS great household Medicine ranks among the leading necessities of life. It is well known to the world that it cures many complaints other remedies cannot reach, this fact is as well established as that the sun lights the world.

Disorders of the Liver and Stomach. Most persons will, at some period of their lives, suffer from indigestion derangement of the liver, stomach or bowels which not quickly removed, frequently settles into a dangerous illness. It is well known in India, and other tropical climates, that Holloway's Pills are the only remedy that can be relied on in such cases. Almost every soldier abroad carries a box of them in his knapsack. In England most persons know that these Pills will cure them whenever the liver, stomach or bowels are out of order and that they need no physician.

Weakness and Debility. Such as suffer from weakness, or debility, and those who feel want of energy, should at once have recourse to these Pills, as they immediately purify the blood, and acting upon the main-spring of life, give strength and vigor to the system. To young persons entering into womanhood, with a derangement of the functions, and to mothers at the turn of life, these Pills will be most efficacious in correcting the tide of life that may be on the turn. Young and elderly men suffer in a similar manner at the same period, when there is always danger; they should therefore undergo a course of this purifying medicine, which ensures lasting health.

Disorders of Children. If these Pills be used according to the printed directions, and the Ointment rubbed over the region of the kidneys, as least once a day as salt is forced into meat, it will penetrate the kidneys and correct any derangement of their organs. Should the affliction be stone or gravel, then the Ointment should be rubbed into the neck of the bladder, and a few days will convince the sufferer that the effect of these two remedies is astonishing.

Disorders of the Stomach. Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and acting through the secretory organs upon the blood itself, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Complaints of Females. The functional irregularities peculiar to the weaker sex, are invariably corrected without pain or inconvenience by the use of Holloway's Pills. They are the safest and surest medicine for all diseases incidental to females of all ages.

Bilious Affections. All young children should have administered to them, from time to time, a few doses of these Pills, which will purify their blood, and enable them to pass safely through the different disorders incidental to children, such as measles, hooping-cough, cowpox, and other infantile diseases. These Pills are so harmless in their nature as not to injure the most delicate constitution, and are therefore more peculiarly adapted as correctives of the humors affecting them.

Dropsy. Hundreds are cured yearly by the use of these Pills conjointly with the Ointment, which should be rubbed very bountifully into the parts affected.

Derangement of the Kidneys. The quantity and quality of the bile are of vital importance to health. Upon the liver, the gland which secretes the fluid so necessary for digestion, the Pills operate specifically, fully rectifying its irregularities, and effectually curing jaundice, bilious remittants, and all the varieties of disease generated by an unnatural condition of that organ. Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known for the following diseases:—
