

Canadian Auto Parts Plan Gets Blast From U.S. Senator

By HAROLD MORRISON
WASHINGTON (CP)—Senator Stuart Symington has called on the U.S. government to take urgent action to counter the impact of Canada's automotive incentive program, saying that unless something is done, the U.S. will lose 60,000 jobs in this industry.

What the Missouri Democrat and the U.S. automobile parts industry have in mind is the possible application of a U.S. countervailing duty against imports of automobile parts made in Canada. Such a duty could be applied if the treasury department concludes that imports have been aided by a public "bounty" or "subsidy" in the home country.

The department has been considering for some months whether such a duty could be applied in the Canadian case, but an official said the legal aspects are still under study by departmental lawyers.

Meanwhile, U.S. automobile parts manufacturers and whole salers have organized a joint committee headed by Jack Whitaker, president of Whitaker Cable Corporation of North Kansas City, Mo., to combat the impact of the Canadian program.

WRITES TO PRESIDENT
Correspondence disclosed in the Senate Tuesday by Symington shows that Whitaker wrote President Johnson March 6 expressing puzzlement that a government which declares war on poverty, reduces taxes and fights unemployment does not defend U.S. manufacturers "against subsidized foreign competition."

"Thousands of jobs in the U.S. are going down the drain if we do not take a positive stand to stop such encroachments," Whitaker wrote the president.

Under the Canadian plan, automobile and parts manufacturers are encouraged to expand home production through a tariff rebate on imports equivalent to the rise in exports of vehicles and parts. The Canadian government has taken the position that this is not a subsidy plan and is entirely within the spirit of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Whitaker said U.S. automobile manufacturers operating in Canada like the plan since they can obtain lower-priced parts in Canada and thereby increase their profits. But many U.S. parts manufacturers are being forced to curtail or halt production altogether.

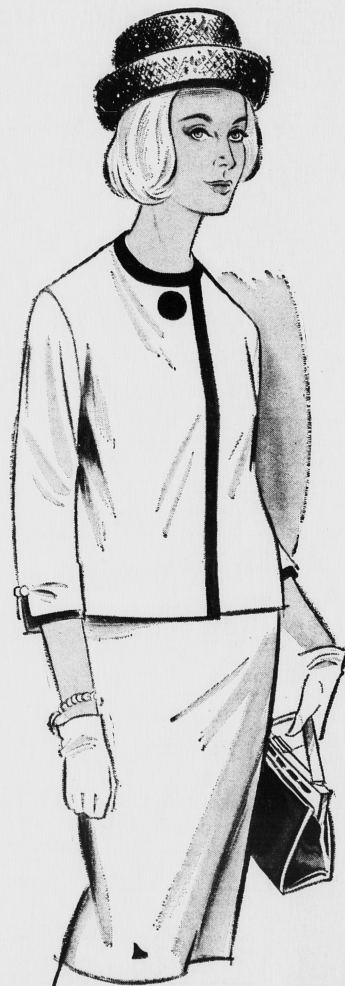

The subject is likely to come up at the next meeting of the Canada-U.S. cabinet committee on trade and economic matters to be held in Ottawa in April.

Copper River In Alaska Is Bone Dry

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP)—Thousands and maybe even millions of fish may be up the Copper River without water.

Reports have been confirmed that the river, one of Alaska's largest, is bone dry, possibly because of an upstream diurnal ice jam caused by the great earthquake last Friday. The Copper River flows into the Gulf of Alaska at Cordova, in the heart of the quake-ravaged region.

In Seattle, a federal fisheries official said the drying up of the waterway could mean a terrific loss of red salmon.

Samuel J. Hutchinson, regional director of the area, bureau of commercial fisheries, said salmon spawned last fall should be heading out of upstream gravel beds where they hatch.

Hutchinson said it was also about time for young red salmon to begin moving toward the ocean after their year's stay in fresh water.

"We should have millions of downstream migrants starting to come down right now," he said. "Most of these would be red salmon, but we'd have millions of young silvers, kings and chums, too."

The Copper and nearby Bering rivers produced 71,000 cases of salmon valued at $2,500,000 last year.
