ELLEN'S DIARY

Harvesting Was Begun And Bales Stored Today

And then it was Friday, a young visitor to carry a picnic basket off to some chosen spot of the farm, and there enjoy a lunch in the open. So many delightful places there are on the farm today. James offered at breakfast, he having already taken stock of the day.

"You should have slept in this morning," and one girl smiled, about to leave then on that outward trek, which leads students off to university classes.

"There will be 'hauling in' unless it happens to rain. And besides," he added, "there are still some chores to do."

It was James who called in a company of the cattle-kind to the stables this evening, while Mack and his father were about affairs of the fields. The cows come in to nurse-babes of calves, and to receive rations of grain. The sounds came in, receding along the valley, and the responsive lows which bring them down from the far slope to cross the stream and climb the nearer incline to the barns.

We came to the outdoors to watch the eager homing. Scamper too was aware of it. His assistance however is restricted to the odd bark. He may not nip for fun, or otherwise, say heels. And robins sang last trills for us, piping away the day to that strange bourne of time-past.

It turned out to be a day of saving—this one, to clear haylows and tuck away bales in mow and loft. It was an afternoon for a pair of lads, and a

MR. AND MRS. ROBERT CROZIER
Couple Wed At Canoe Cove
Residing In Kelvin Grove

Canoe Cove Presbyterian Church was the scene of a pretty wedding on Saturday afternoon, July 2, 1966 when Mary Bell Curtis Darrach, youngest daughter of Daniel Darrach and the late Mrs. Darrach, New Argyle, became the bride of Robert Lea Crozier, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Crozier, Kelvin Grove.

Rev. R.A. Gillis officiated at the double ring ceremony. The church was decorated with baskets of mixed lupins, and pink and white peonies and the guest pews were marked with pink roses and white bows.

Dr. Peter MacDonald of Saint John, N.B. accompanied the sojourner, Stella MacEachern, who sang the "Lord's Prayer" prior to the ceremony, and "O Perfect Love" during the signing of the register.

The bride who was given in marriage by her brother, Hector Darrach, was gowned in a floor length original of white silk organza over satin featuring a low neckline trimmed with tiny pearls and sequins, and short sleeves. Her elbow-length veil

Emphasis Is On "Swingers" In New Washington Society

By ARCH MACKENZIE
WASHINGTON (CP) — Back in 1939, the British embassy restricted the guest list for a royal garden party to 1,350.

Congress, spurred by spouses angered at being unable to take tea and strawberries with King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, promptly killed some spending legislation of importance to the United Kingdom.

Those were the days when Britain's stately Georgian pile of red brick on Embassy Row ruled the roost—more exclusive by careful design than the White House itself.

Under the autocratic rule of its social secretary, Irene Boyle, no dealer from Franklin Delano Roosevelt's administration was allowed to penetrate the place for two years.

But Miss Boyle, who died in April in Italy after serving five ambassadors, has no equal today among the 115 foreign missions now here.

GROPE FOR LEADER
Washington society, in fact, still seems to be groping for a leader to replace the widowed Jacqueline Kennedy, whose sophisticated elegance made the White House the "in" place. Mrs. Kennedy now lives in New York.

The last real social lions on the scene were the French and that status disappeared — assisted by irritation with President de Gaulle's concepts of global strategy — on the departure last year of Ambassador Herve Alphand and his sparkling wife, Nicole.

The White House under Lyndon Baines Johnson and his wife Lady Bird, more prone to be planting trees as part of her beautification program than doing the frug, has a Texan earthiness.

The Vietnamese war has subdued it. Barbecues for convalescing veterans are common or the president uses his yacht to entertain on the Potomac. But there has not been any visible halt to a steady escalation in the cocktail rite.

MELT MANY TYPES
This, coupled with receptions, a steady round of national days and dinners, remains Washington's occupational melting pot blending diplomats, politicians, the military, lobbyists, business and the ubiquitous press which indefatigably chronicles major occasions and interprets every nuance.

The preoccupation among Washington's three newspapers with social news—strikes some as highly provincial, others as good gleaming for future reference.

Proud but poor new nations spend lavishly to woo aid from this richest country in the world; nations of all sizes discuss trade over martinis; the Communist bloc delegations look and listen.

Exclusivity might once have been the hallmark of social success, but today the emphasis seems more on who "swings" and who doesn't, or who can come up with the most sumptuous party.

Some examples: Spanish Ambassador de Merry del Val and his wife, the marchioness, apologize tongue-in-cheek for the "poverty" exemplified by 60 guests at dinner being served by liveried footmen while a band plays. Dancing comes later.

P. E. Island Guides Leave For Can. Heritage Camps

Eight P.E.I. Guides and a Guider will be leaving the province soon to attend Heritage Camps in three other provinces. The travel expenses of these girls will be partly defrayed by a youth travel grant from the Canadian Centennial Commission.

IDA BAILEY ALLEN A Presidential Pleaser Within His Guidelines

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN
THE Savarin au Rhum Cake, on our menu yesterday in this column as served in the White House, is not costly, but it does call for a reasonable amount of time for preparation. However, as it is a yeast-raised cake, comparatively little actual working time is needed. The yeast goes on doing its work to raise the cake while, meantime, you do anything you like.

Post-Nuptial Reception Held

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Corcoran were hosts to friends and relatives recently at a post-nuptial reception for their eldest daughter, Hermina and her husband, Dr. Roch Vienne. Assisting in serving at the buffet supper were Mrs. Anthony Gallant, Mrs. John Jones, Mrs. John P. Gallant, and Mrs. John J. Corcoran.
