China Is One-Tooth Tiger Without Russian Arms Aid

By BEM PRICE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Without Soviet military aid, Communist China is a one-tooth dragon.

So long as the Sino-Soviet split continues over how best to attain world communism, it is one of the most important political facts in the world today.

The United States' view of China, without Soviet military aid, was presented in a little-noticed speech last year by Roger Hilsman, assistant secretary of state for Far Eastern affairs. He said:

"The free nations of Asia are by no means out of danger. Communist China is still capable of grave and costly mischief. But it is not a formidable power in terms of modern technology."

Any armed force with claims to modernity operates on pieces of paper. The Red Chinese are no exception. Tables of equipment and organization have to be issued. Tactical doctrine has to be published. A great many of these papers have found their way into the West.

From this material, and from informed sources here, this picture of the Chinese peoples liberation army emerges:

In terms of manpower, China now has the world's largest standing armed force: 2,800,000 men. The army consists of an estimated 2,500,000 men; the others are in the technical services and air force.

Insofar as Western intelligence knows, China is not yet a nuclear power, but for 10 years China was sheltered beneath the nuclear umbrella raised by the Soviet Union.

Now there is an ideological split between China and the Soviet Union over which shall wear the mantle of leadership in world Communist affairs. Whether the split means a removal of the Soviet nuclear shield is a matter of debate.

But there is no debate over the fact that the Soviets have withdrawn technical aid from the mainland Chinese, a withdrawal which has affected China's military might.

In assessing China's military capabilities and intentions, a Washington intelligence source said:

"The Chinese can make a lot of trouble around their borders, but you can make a fair case that if these people are reasonably realistic, they will steer clear of anything that would involve a straight out meeting with the United States.

INDIAN OPERATION

Another source said: "In general the Chinese do not have the logistical backup to conduct large operations beyond their borders. India was about as much as they could stand from that viewpoint, especially since the Soviets stopped helping."

Had the Chinese attempted to enter the Indian plains, he continued, they would have reached them without armor and with little artillery, a gamble they could not take in view of the vulnerability of their supply lines to air attack.

This brought up the subject of the Chinese air force.

One source said it was doubtful whether the Chinese had been able to produce any aircraft of their own and reports indicate they have not received any from the Soviet Union in three years.

U.S. intelligence now believes the Chinese air force consists mainly of obsolescent MiG-15s, MiG-17s and "some few" MiG-19s.

As late as 1960 Western reports estimated the Chinese had an air force of 2,500 to 3,000 aircraft.

Now, said one source, the Chinese air force is believed to be "slightly under 2,000 planes.

Dynamite Found Wrapped In Flag

QUEBEC (CP) — Eight sticks of dynamite wrapped in two Union Jacks were found at the foot of a flagpole on the Plains of Abraham. One of the flags had been taken down from the pole.

The dynamite sticks were tied together with a wick which police said had been lighted but went out before it burned to the end.

Police were tipped off about the bomb by anonymous telephone calls and dismantled the apparatus.

The flagpole is located in the vicinity where a monument to General James Wolfe was toppled and smashed last spring.

CHOLERA KILLS THOUSANDS

NEW DELHI (Reuters) — Cholera cost the lives of 11,376 Indians in the last six months of 1963, Deputy Health Minister D. S. Raju told the parliament Wednesday.

Opening lead—six of spades.

Certain bids are treated as 100 per cent forcing, but yet there is nothing to prevent a player from asserting his independence of mind by passing a forcing bid—if he is willing to brave partner's wrath when it turns out he is wrong.

For an example of the temptations that sometimes beset a player, examine the South hand in this deal taken from a team match. North opened with two clubs, an artificial bid forcing to game though it did not necessarily show a club suit.

South made the negative response of two diamonds, which had nothing to do with diamonds as such, but merely denied positive values. North now bid three diamonds, showing a genuine suit.

At this point, South passed, even though the diamond raise was 100 per cent forcing. In the actual case South was right, since no game could be made against proper defense, but not South ran a serious risk because North's hand might have been stronger, in which case a cold seven-a slam might have been missed. South made ten tricks.

The bidding at the second table was:

North	East	South	West
2 ♣	Pass	2 ♦	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
5 ♣	Pass	6 ♦	Pass
Pass	Dble.

Here the South player regarded the obligation to bid as absolute, and he therefore raised to four diamonds. Eventually he became declarer at five diamonds doubled, a contract he should have made when West selected the three of clubs as his opening lead.

Declarer ducked in dummy, winning the opening lead with the nine, and then cashed the A-K of diamonds. If he had now played clubs, he would have been able to dispose of all his heart losers and would have made the contract as a result of the favorable opening lead.

But, for reasons unknown, he led the king of spade at trick four. East took the ace and returned the king of hearts, and South now had to go down one.
