Yanks Talk Crash Programs To Train Additional Scientists

By G. K. HODENFIELD
WASHINGTON (AP)—For two years Americans have been talking about crash programs to train more scientists. They're still talking, but the programs apparently have flopped.

When the Russians sent Sputnik I into orbit in the fall of 1957 there was a great outcry in the United States.

"We are lagging behind the Russians," it went. "Our schools are to blame."

The school was a handy scapegoat. Today's students are tomorrow's scientists, and any national program to train more scientists has to start in the classroom.

APATHY AND RED TAPE
In some communities there has been remarkable improvement. But at best this is spotty progress. Country-wide, so-called crash programs seem to be wrapped in apathy and tied with red tape.

Dr. Ellsworth Osborne of the U.S. office of education says the country now is spending between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000 a year to improve science teaching. That includes expenditures by the government as well as foundations and private industry.

"This money is being poured in at the top of a funnel," says Osborne. "Very little is getting through to the local level where it is needed. It's like pouring money down a rathole."

Scientists and educationists agree there are five essentials to a good school program in science. There must be a broad, comprehensive course of studies, from elementary grades through high school. There should be one well-trained guidance officer for each 200 to 300 high school students. And there must be good teachers, good textbooks, good equipment and facilities.

Dr. James B. Conant, former president of Harvard University, recently completed a two-year study of the American high school.

He found 75 per cent of them too small to offer a diversified program except at exorbitant expense. They can't afford advanced science courses for only a few students, they can't afford special teachers for those classes, they can't afford guidance officers, up-to-date textbooks, or laboratory equipment.

This is the situation, point-by-point, based on the latest studies and on a series of interviews with scientists and educationists:

1. Curriculum—with a few notable exceptions, science study in U. S. public schools hasn't changed much in this century.
2. Guidance officers—by a conservative estimate there is a shortage of 15,000 guidance officers. Literally thousands of potential scientists are being lost to the field through poor counseling or none at all.
3. Teachers—this is perhaps the most complex part of the entire problem.

Figures compiled by the National Education Association show a shortage of 135,000 qualified teachers. The need in high school science is especially severe because teachers are lured into private industry by better pay.

Many schools just can't offer the courses they would like to, for lack of a teacher.

"But it's more than just a shortage of teachers," says one scientist. "Many of our science teachers graduated from college 15 to 20 years ago. They have been following the same old course for years, and they're quite content with it."

"Until we can bring these teachers up to date, we'll be teaching space age science with horse-and-buggy teachers."

TEXTBOOK TROUBLES
4. Textbooks—Sputnik I started whizzing around the earth more than two years ago. It will be at least another year or two before textbooks dealing with earth satellites are in general use around the country. In some schools, the students won't see those books for another four to five years.

Truth Doubted In Kidnapping

By HENRY S. BRADSHAW
NEW DELHI (AP)—Prime Minister Nehru said Monday he is unable to determine whether the United States or Communist China is telling the truth in their exchange of kidnapping charges.

"All this sounds more like some piece of fiction than fact," Nehru told Parliament.

China handed the government a note Monday charging that the Americans kidnapped Chang Chien-yu, a member of its consulate general staff in Bombay. Peking said Chang was forced to sign a statement asking asylum in the United States.

(In Washington Monday, Lincoln White, state department press officer, called the Peking version absurd and accused the Chinese of trying to cover up their own illegal behavior by fabricating this charge.)

The United States filed a protest Saturday accusing the Chinese consulate general at Bombay of kidnapping marine Sgt. Robert Armstrong, 34, when he drove up in front of the Chinese compound with Chang last Friday. Armstrong later was handed over to Indian police by the Chinese.

Nehru said Chang and Armstrong had been notified to remain in India until the government completes its investigation. The press in Bombay reported Chang has been taken away to an unknown destination, presumably by the Chinese consulate. Nehru said neither Chang nor Armstrong had been questioned yet by Indian police.

Nehru told Parliament U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker notified the foreign office Friday that Chang had requested asylum at the American consulate general in Bombay. Later in the day, Nehru continued, another U.S. diplomat reported Chang had returned to the Chinese consulate general but then communications difficulties made it impossible to give details.

Still later the same day, Nehru added, the Chinese consulate general in Bombay reported Chang had been kidnapped and that Armstrong scuffled with him when he tried to return to the Chinese consulate general. The Chinese reported they took Armstrong into the compound.

Nehru said investigation is continuing into the conflicting versions.

BOY SIFTS RUSSIAN SOIL SAMPLES
Robert Graham 14, sifts a soil sample sent to him by the Russian Government, hoping they will help him in research of the possibilities of life on the planet Mars. The young Memphis, Tennessee scientist got the brushoff from American sources when he wrote asking for samples of soil. He then wrote a letter to Nikita Khrushchev and the Russian Academy of Science and back came a big box with three smaller boxes of soil samples. Each accompanied by a scientific memo in Russian script. (AP Wirephoto)

CPR Revenue Is Increased

MONTREAL (CP)—Canadian Pacific Railway Company Monday reported an increase of $1,576,077 in operating earnings for October over the corresponding month last year.

Operating earnings after costs were $3,121,907 against $1,545,830 in October, 1958. Total rail revenue increased $82,262 to $39,068,157 from $38,985,895. Figures for the first 10 months of this year showed an increase of $1,065,901 in operating earnings after costs, with the total to the end of October at $27,358,864 against $26,292,963. Total rail revenue increased $12,492,829 to $399,595,023 from $389,595,023. Costs were up $11,426,928 to $372,636,159 from $360,809,231 during the first 10 months of 1959.

Canadian-Born Glen Ford Plays Comedy Roles Now

By JAMES BACON
HOLLYWOOD (AP)—"I like to laugh," says Glen Ford, "and I figure everybody else in the world wants to laugh too."

Thus Canadian-born Ford explains how he shifted his career from serious dramatic roles to comedy-in-uniform parts and became the movies' top box office star in the process.

His block-busting movies that shot him atop the list of Hollywood's top 10 moneymakers included such as Teahouse of the August Moon, Imitation General and Don't Go Near the Water. He also made a western the same year. Despite its forbidding title, it was one of the comedy hits of the year: The Sheepman. Teahouse was the movie that discovered the Ford comedy talent. As one of its makers recalls: "On the stage, the part of the Korean narrator had most of the comedy. The movie script, on paper, had the same ratio. Marlon Brando played the narrator in the movie and Ford was hired for the relatively serious role of the lieutenant who tries to govern the Korean villagers according to army regulations and gets embroiled in their problems instead."

"No one had ever stolen a movie from Marlon before, but Glenn stole this one. His comic approach to the role, especially in the gift Geisha scene, was something out of Chaplin. He surprised all of us."

LIKES SERVICE HUMOR
Ford explains why he chose service pictures to exploit this new-found comedy talent.

"The greatest natural humor in the world is found among servicemen. One of the most laugh-filled times of my life was during my hitch in the marine corps during the war. Inexplicably, things that happen to servicemen are much funnier than the same incidents with civilians. That's why ex-servicemen and their families flock to see comedy-in-uniform."

The Portneuf, Que., native credits the switch to uniform comedy as the reason behind his box office upsurge, but refuses to take full credit himself.

"I had some of the greatest comedy makers in the business, directors like George Marshall, in my camp. What I did mostly was execute their orders."

"In Don't Go Near the Water, the most hilarious scene in the picture was the wild building of the officer's club in which every rule of architecture was violated and every rule of comedy was upheld. It was the highlight of the picture, I thought—and my big secret was that it was the one scene in which I didn't appear once. So you see, I can't take too much credit."

PRIVATE AFFAIR
Glenn has little to say about the breakup of his marriage to Eleanor Powell. Her divorce suit, filed last May, stunned Hollywood and much of the movie world. Her 16-year-old marriage to Ford had been considered one of Hollywood's happiest.

Unlike most Hollywood split-ups, the columnists cannot agree on what caused this one. Several noted the coincidence of Ford co-starring in It Started With a Kiss with Debbie Reynolds. The picture shot for six weeks in Spain, Debbie, no stranger to the divorce and triangle headlines, went to Europe as the suffering wife whose husband had been lured by one of the world's most beautiful women.

When the troupe returned to Hollywood, Debbie came back her own happy clowning self. Ford came back to a surprise divorce suit filed by his wife.

Such timing was sure to be noticed by the columnists in their speculations. Ford angrily denied the insinuations and called the reports "utterly ridiculous."

The two currently are co-starring in The Gazebo, another comedy.
