Fashion Individualist Now Deplores Mess It Is In

By JANE BECKER
Canadian Press Staff Writer
MONTREAL (CP) — Fashion today is like politics—in a mess—says Mme. Elsa Schiaparelli of Paris, an acknowledged authority on women's clothes.

At a reception to mark manufacture of her designs under license in Canada, Schiaparelli—small, dynamic, and immensely sure of herself—deplored the state of affairs in the world of haute couture.

"There is no line; the line is here, there, all over the place," she shrugged Monday night. "A woman today does not know what effect she wears to achieve."

"Perhaps that is a good thing. But nowhere is fashion the way it was. From Paris, all the old spirit is gone."

But Schiaparelli, who put zippers in dresses, manufactured "shocking" perfume and told women they should dare to be different, is still an example of uncompromising fashion.

Here, she greeted hundreds of women—instead of a handful of boutique customers—Schiaparelli incorporated.

Now her designs are licensed in 10 countries, to approved manufacturers, and produced with modifications for volume sales at a moderate price.

Canada is newest on the list. Makers here are set to turn out a line of Schiaparelli-inspired furs, bathing suits and lingerie.

Schiaparelli is tired of making only dresses, she says. Besides expanding into other lines of feminine apparel, she is turning her hand to home furnishings.

"Fairs and fashion run through," she explains. "If you wear a stunning dress, you want the things you live with to be in keeping."

NEW YORK (AP) — A 70-year-old great-grandmother was knocked down on a Bronx street and robbed Wednesday night by a boy and a girl — both about 12.

Marriage Unites Two Old Island Families

A wedding of wide interest was solemnized at the home of the bride, New Glasgow, P.E.I., Saturday evening, September 22nd at 8:00 o'clock when Noram Jean, only daughter of Rev. W. J. and Mrs. MacLeod was united in marriage with Robert Davis Schurman, son of Mr. Everett T. Schurman and the late Mrs. Schurman.

Free-town, Rev. Waldron MacQuarrie, uncle of the groom, officiated at the double-ring ceremony and was assisted by Rev. Allison Haley, minister of the New Glasgow United Church.

The pianist, Mrs. George Dickleson, in her usual capable manner played the wedding music and accompanied the guest soloists, Miss Dorothy Baxter, who sweetly sang, "O Perfect Love" during the signing of the register.

The home was beautifully decorated with baskets of gladioli, snapdragons, sweet peas and mixed bouquets. These were very attractively arranged by friends of the bride.

The radiant and lovely bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a waltz length, strapless gown of ivory Chantilly lace over white satin fashioned with fitted bodice bouffant skirt, scalloped hemline and matching bolero jacket with high neckline.

Peter Pan collar trimmed with iridescent and studded pearls. Her elbow length veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a halo head dress of seed pearls and iridescent sequins. She carried a cascade bouquet of American Beauty Roses.

Mrs. George MacMurdo, Kelvin, matron of honor, wore a strapless waltz length gown of baby blue nylon net over taffeta, with matching bandeau headress and mitts. She carried a nosegay of white carnations.

The groomsmen were Mr. George MacMurdo, a personal friend of the groom.

Mrs. MacLeod chose for her daughter's wedding a sheath style dress of grape silk with matching accessories and wore a corsage of yellow roses.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception for 70 guests was held at Shining Waters Lodge, Cavendish. The bridal table was most attractively arranged by the hostess. It was centered by a pillar, three tier wedding cake with floral topping. The dining hall and lounge had clusters of gladioli, sweet-peas, mums and other autumn flowers.

Rev. Allison Haley proposed the toast to the bride to which the groom fittingly responded. Misses Gwyneth MacLean and Winnifred Anne Lowther were in charge of the guest book.

The couple left on a motortrip through the U.S.A. and Western Canada. For travelling the bride wore a sheath style blue silk dress, pink wool shorts and white accessories.

This year Louise Riley, a Calgary librarian, won the medal given annually by the Canadian Association of Children's Librarians for her book "Train to Tiger Lily." This is a fantasy with the setting in Western Canada.

In Prince Edward Island we have our beloved L. M. Montgomery. She loved and believed in youth. We feel sure, she would say, that signing tea Wednesday at the High School and throughout the province there are probably many star ascending writers.

KEEP IN TRIM

Loose Flesh Unlovely, Exercise Is Firming

By IDA JEAN KAIN
If you feel bulky-fat instead of willow-slim, aim for increased flexibility. A small amount of precision exercises can work sheer magic, provided they are taken regularly.

Keep supple and the long-awaited torso line so fashionable this season can help you look incredibly slim. If you are short-waisted it is more important than ever to keep flexible through the middle measurement.

Stretching is a natural, so start with stretching. . . . Position: Standing, arms raised overhead, right wrist clasped in left and pull firmly up-and-in with middle muscles. . . . hold throughout exercise.

Movement: Pull along the right side. . . . elongate the middle measurement and hold movement to a slow count of six. Change hand clasp and pull along the left side. Repeat twice on each side.

Follow through with side-bend from the same position. As you bend toward the right, pull strongly with right hand on left wrist. Keep it smooth and hold the movement. Back to starting position, change hand clasp and pull as you bend toward the left.

This is wonderfully suppling. Repeat three times. . . . holding. . . . BIAS MUSCLES. Here's an exercise to tone the bias muscles of the abdomen and flatten the front line.

Position: Lying on back on floor knees bent, soles of feet flat on floor, arms down at sides. . . . Movement: Raise hips slightly and pull up and in for-cably with right muscles, tilting hips toward the right. Hold to a slow count of six. Return to center, again pull up and in strong as you tilt hips toward left side. Again, hold. Repeat six times, holding movement.

To pare down the hips, practice this to the special. Warning: It's not for softies. . . . Position: Tack position of sprinter, set to go, hands on floor, right leg stretched back, left knee bent. . . . Movement: With a jump, reverse the position of legs, extending the left leg straight back. Keep 5 times a day. This exercise stimulates circulation and reaches the bustle of muscle padding back of hips.

Don't overdo exercises but take them daily.

MARY HAWORTH

Man Never Speaks Of Love

Dear Mary Haworth: I love my fiancé very much and plan to marry next March. He has been so faithful and loving to me. He other things day and we see each other every day and we see each other every day and we see each other every day.

Could you please help, by explaining his attitude. I can't see myself telling him every day that I love him, while never having him say it to me. The situation really worries me, and I will appreciate any advice you can give. E.V.

LONG-TERM PROBLEM

Dear E.V.: Of course we could be philosophical and sigh "One can't have everything"—and emphasize such virtues of character and behavior as your fiancé does manifest. But really, you do have the makings of a long-term problem here, in his verbally noncommittal kind of devotion.

The keenest psychologists are pointing out that we lose self-capacity to feel the good human feelings we don't express; and, by the same token, feelings translated into expressive words and appropriate gestures tend to grow in vitality and scope.

Thus to say sincerely "I love you" and recite the appreciative reasons why, helps to increase the magnitude and depth of your delight in the beloved while, at the same time, promoting the growth of a reciprocal fund of love for yourself.
