

'Peter Rabbit' The Gateway To Freedom For Beatrix

LONDON (AP) — Remember the peaceful world of Peter Rabbit and his friends Flopsy, Mopsy and Cottontail? The books emerged from the private hell of the childhood and youth of their creator, Beatrix Potter. Her secret diary was published recently, 100 years after her birth.

From the ages of 14 to 30 Beatrix Potter wrote the journal, entirely in code. The 200,000 words were deciphered by Leslie Linder, an engineer with a lifelong fondness for Miss Potter's work.

She was raised in a strict Victorian household of great luxury and idleness. She described her parents as "obstinate hard-headed matter-of-fact folk." She never went to school and had no friends of her own age.

Her father kept her on a tiny allowance, and was "constantly on the lookout for matters of complaint."

She suffered constantly from headaches and "odious fits of low spirits" — a common ailment of daughters of the well-to-do in Victorian England who were given little to do except stay home.

At 17, she wrote: "I have begun the dark journey of life. Will it go on as darkly as it has begun?"

At 30, she still felt an ugly duckling: "I wonder why I never seem to know people! It makes one wonder whether one is presentable."

TURNT TO ART

Through these years, she was studying natural history and biology, and going to London art galleries. She gradually developed the watercolor style which illustrated her children's books in such detail.

In the fourth-floor nursery of her parents' London home, which became her room, she classified fossils and studied fungi. Her diary: "I cannot rest, I must draw, however poor the result... I can't settle to anything but my painting. I lose patience over everything else... I will do something sooner or later."

She did. The Story of Peter Rabbit was refused by several publishers and she had it printed privately in 1901. It sold for about 25 cents a copy.

Among those who praised it was Arthur Conan Doyle, creator of Sherlock Holmes. Soon she got a publisher — Warne, the company now publishing her diary — and the book was successful. It is still being bought by parents.

The profits from Peter Rabbit and his nursery successors were her passport from her parents.

At 47 she married a lawyer named Heelis, settled on a farm to raise sheep and never wrote again.

Reserve Force Of Nurses Fills Need

By ANNE MASON
EDMONTON (CP)—Labor department figures say women have an average of 25 years of free time after nursing their families to maturity.

Some of them keep right on nursing.

The University of Alberta Hospital has 125 of them—former nurses who have retrained for the profession after an absence of five to 20 years and are available for duty during emergencies, staff shortages and vacation periods.

At any time, a dozen or more members of the hospital nursing reserve can be seen, many providing intensive bedside care in the busiest wards.

Each works one or two shifts a week and many take on full-time duty for three to six weeks in the summer for holiday relief.

"A good many of us need to feel needed," says Mrs. Gordon Ades, former president of the University Hospital Nursing Reserve Association. "It's a good outlet for many of us who have some time to spare."

OVERCOMES SHORTAGE

The reserve was created in 1962 by Dr. J. D. Wallace, then the hospital's executive director, to provide a backlog of experienced help during nursing shortages. Response was immediate, and enthusiastic. About 90 per cent of the retrainees requalified as registered nurses and most have remained active.

Miss M. G. Purcell, the hospital's nursing director, says the reserves not only provide staff security but set an example to students and younger nurses because of the quality of their work.

"Many of us have raised children," Mrs. Ades explains. "This gives us an insight into understanding the patient and his family. And many of us have been patients ourselves."

Pay rates are the same but reserves always work under supervision of a regular nurse.

"A nurse coming back to work has not been expected to accept responsibility beyond her preparation," Miss Purcell explains.

The reserve association is part of an evacuation plan for nuclear attack developed by the Alberta Emergency Measures Organization.

Tender Shoulder Chops Ease Burden Of Budget

BY IDA BAILEY ALLEN
Most of us welcome news of interesting ways to prepare the more budgetwise cuts of meat, especially for summer barbecues. Tender shoulder chops, marinated in kraut juice and Italian dressing and served with piquant sauerkraut, fall into the class of "detectable-budget stretchers". Both chops and kraut are simple to prepare and ideal for easy outdoor dining.

Measurements level:
recipes for 6

BARBECUED LAMB CHOPS WITH SAUERKRAUT

3 1/2 c. undrained sauerkraut
1 pkg. (1 1/2 oz.) dehydrated Italian salad dressing
mix
6 shoulder lamb chops, about 1 1/2" thick
1-3 cup butter or margarine
Drain kraut; reserve liquid. Combine kraut liquid and salad dressing mix; mix well to make marinade. Pour this over lamb chops; refrigerate 1 hr. or longer, turning chops occasionally.

Remove chops; reserve marinade. Broil chops 6 to 7" from source of heat in broiler; or in outdoor grill. Allow 16 to 18 min. per side, or broil to desired degree of doneness. Meanwhile, combine kraut, butter or margarine and reserved marinade. Heat to serving temperature. Serve with chops.

MONDAY DINNER

Tomato Juice Piquante
Vegetable Relishes
Barbecued Lamb Chops with Sauerkraut
Corn-on-Cob
Lemon Sherbert
Frolics or Bananas
Hot or Iced Coffee or Tea Milk

Another tasty entree that requires little preparation is one in which tender, juicy lamb steaks are served with a zesty kraut relish. The flavor of the steaks is again enhanced with a marinade, and chopped chives and mustard make the kraut even more enticing.

LAMB STEAKS WITH KRAUT RELISH

3 c. undrained sauerkraut
1 peeled section garlic, crushed, or 1 tsp. garlic salt
1/4 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. pepper
3 lamb steaks, about 1" thick
1-3 c. chopped chives
1 tsp. table-mustard
Drain kraut; reserve liquid. Combine kraut liquid, garlic, salt and pepper; mix well, making marinade. Pour over lamb steaks and refrigerate 2 hr., turning lamb occasionally. Meanwhile, combine kraut, chives and mustard; mix well to make relish; chill. Remove lamb from marinade; reserve marinade. Broil lamb 4" to 5" from source of heat for 8 to 10 min. on each side, brush occasionally with marinade. Serve with kraut relish.

THE CHIEF MAKES RAW VEGETABLE GARNISHES
Mesdames: It is worthwhile for you to keep refrigerated in a plastic storage bag a few vegetables to use in garnishing. For example, 2 or 3 tender carrots to peel and cut into "sticks"; part of a cucumber to cut into thin slices; and a few radishes to thin-cut crosswise almost all the way through, then let stand an hour in ice-cold water and pull out into "accordion" shape. Keep sliced bread - and butter - pickles on hand; and some stuffed olives. This assortment is enough to garnish at least three summer entree platters. And the small amount of money spent for these garnishes is not wasted, for they become part of the meal, adding flavor, color, flair and nutritive value.

BODIES FOUND ON ALPS
BOURG ST. MAURICE (AP)—Three French youths who attempted to scale a peak in the Mont Blanc massif were found dead Tuesday, bringing to 10 the number of recent fatalities among vacation climbers. The bodies were spotted by a helicopter searching the mountain-side when the weather cleared.

SIMPLICITY IS KEYNOTE

MARY HAWORTH

Sweetheart Leaves Him, Man Realizes Mistakes

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Nearly two months have passed since I was dismissed by the girl I love. Since then I have been living in a world of confusion misery and pain, not eating right nor thinking straight. I don't sleep for days on end.

Hardly more than a month before the affair ended, we were inseparable. The break resulted because I had given her a wrong impression of myself and my intentions. I was a bore, not very congenial, in certain moods.

She got the feeling that I wanted sole lien on her company and her favors. Actually I never verbalized any such claim, never said I wanted to chain her. She broke off by telephone.

I have seen her only twice since, in passing. The first time I said "Hello," and she didn't respond. The second time, in a restaurant, I said nothing.

I think I've been considerate since she broke with me. I haven't written her, begging for mercy, nor pestered her with telephone calls, nor haunted her at work. Seeing her with others, I haven't made jealous scenes. Recently I had opportunity to do a hidden good turn for a kinsman of hers; and I did it because I love her.

This is the first time I've ever loved anyone. This girl is my soul. If her life depended upon mine, I would give my life to save her. I'll never do anything to hurt her. But from the looks of things, she hates me. I shudder at the thought. Except for two close friends, nobody knows of the scream of anguish inside me.

Love, to me, is deep mutual trust and shared understanding that enriches one's life. It isn't a series of sordid games. I've never been sure how she felt about me. If only I could get her back. I would give my right arm in exchange. I would appreciate your advice. S. D.

DEAR S. D.: Your 3-page manuscript of anguished reflections is here reduced to about one-third its original length. The authenticity of your suffering is unmistakable. Even so, your letter is an exercise in beating around the bush, rather than searching looking facts in the face, expending the whys and wherefores of behavior that finished off the affair.

Thus I figure that you probably bring increased evasiveness of character to bear upon your interrelationship. And this trait of yours probably had much to do with the girl's decision to break away as an urgently necessary self-protective measure.

Her necessity, very likely, was to safeguard the man against which doubtless was being seriously undermined, possibly to the point of treasured emotional collapse, by your obstinate precautionary discrimination to make positive, responsible social commitments or proposals, meanwhile consuming her, figuratively, in an affair.

If you love the girl with all the profundity that you proclaim to me, why haven't you waged an all-out campaign to make her your cherished wife? Why insist upon talking for granted her self-giving allegiance in a "no strings attached" format, an arrangement you tacitly instituted and implicitly defended, by simply refusing to come to grips with considerations of honor, I gather.

Are you married already? Do background factors prohibit divorce? Are you plagued by vaguely ambivalent sex conflicts obscuringly unsure whether man-woman love is the answer to your deepest unrest?

As I get the picture, in the depths of your soul there does exist a potential, as yet undeveloped, of truly loving a wife. But in relation to this girl, you took a wrong road. Until the break, you were carelessly exploiting her, no doubt. Since the break, you've been worshipping an unreal idyllic image of her.

In my view, the tormenting break is a blessing in disguise, an act of Providence designed to steer and indeed belt you back towards peace, reason and joy. For help enroute, try psychoanalytic therapy. M. H.

Farmers here tell us this will be a bumper year for potatoes, with beautiful weather, no blight and the potato crop very early coming on the market. In fact some are caught with old spuds in their cellars as the market for them died quickly. One man here has 40 acres and that's a lot of work and a mountain of potatoes.

Hale and hearty Mr. Jay says he has no intention of getting old or retiring from the business world or his job as auctioneer at many sales. They served the village public in that friendly way for half a century.
