Announce R.A.F.

These trials foreshadow the most important developments in the air defence since the invention of radar.
Other developments the minister announced for the air force:
During the coming year there will be an increase in the size and effectiveness of the front line of the R.A.F.
Fighter Command now has its first British swept-wing fighters. The year will see a steady increase in the rate of equipment with Swifts and Hunters.
Airfield Improved
The re-equipment and expansion of Bomber Command will continue.
Ground organization has been speeded up and radar control made more efficient to combat the modern bomber which is not only fast but can change direction rapidly. Airfields have also been improved. Runways are being made longer and stronger for the three new types of atom bomber—the Valiant, Vulcan and Victor. Ground servicing has also been introduced to keep runways free of mud which freezes at high altitude warfare and can thus jam the undercarriages of planes.
The air force aims to spend $63,000,000 more in the coming year on planes and armament than it has during the current year. But costs on other equipment, stores and buildings will be down. Total estimate of expenditure will be $1,375,592,000, compared with $1,394,400,000 for 1953-54.
The minister expressed disappointment in the rate of recruiting pilots and navigators. Little more than half the pilots needed and an even lower proportion of navigators have joined the service. He said this was partly due to the raising of standards in selection.

Federal Control

in the province.
The Privy Council judgment dismissed an appeal by the attorney-general of Ontario, Alberta and Prince Edward Island against the first part of the Supreme Court decision. It allowed a cross-appeal by Winner against the prohibition of purely intra-province traffic.
The law lords ordered that the attorney-general of Ontario, Alberta, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick pay the costs incurred by Winner in the courts of Canada and his costs in Privy Council appeals, which had been consolidated.
Winner's cross-appeal was supported by the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway and by the attorney-general of Canada.
Other provinces also intervened in support of the main appeal.
The case was argued at length last November. The judgment had been awaited with interest in Canada, since it involves the powers of the provinces under the provisions of the British North America Act to legislate with regard to the use of highways as part of an interprovincial bus service.
Lord Porter, giving judgment, said the relevant sections of the British North America Act are those which state that in each province the legislature might exclusively make laws in relation to "local works and undertakings other than . . . lines of steam, or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces or extending beyond the limits of the province."
It was argued before that law lords, Lord Porter said, that Winner's bus service was not specifically listed as being outside provincial jurisdiction. Their Lordships rejected this, saying it was enough, that in buses as in ships, there was a "connecting undertaking."

Seek More Control Over Credit For Bank Of Canada

OTTAWA, (CP)—The Federal Government asked Parliament Monday to give the Bank of Canada more control over credit issued by Canada's chartered banks.
Another provision in a series of amendments to the Bank of Canada Act, introduced in the Commons by Finance Minister Abbott, would tend to strengthen the central bank's influence over prices or the country's bond markets.
A third change—previously announced—would enable the Bank of Canada to make short-term loans to the chartered banks on the security of insured mortgages on which they will be allowed to lend home-building money for the first time under housing legislation now before Parliament.
Shift Reserve Ratio
The central organization's power over bank credit would be bolstered by an amendment giving it authority to shift the ratio of cash reserves which each bank must maintain in relation to its total deposits.
At present, the banks must by statute keep on hand five per cent of the amount of deposits. In practice, they usually hold about 10 per cent.
Mr. Abbott's figure would set the minimum between eight and 12 per cent and allow the Bank of Canada to adjust the current figure within that range.
This could have the effect of increasing or reducing the flow of bank credit, by freeing more money for loans or causing the banks to call in money out on loan.
Important Shift
The reserve would not be made to jump more than one per cent in any single month under the bill, but experts say a shift of even this much could make a considerable change in the country's credit situation.
The banks now have on deposit about $10,000,000,000. There cash reserves were about $882,000,000 at last Nov. 30.
In the bond field, the new measure would remove a restriction on the Bank of Canada's holdings of government securities. Up to now, the central bank has been discouraged from holding government securities not maturing in two years.
The amendments would take away this restriction and tell the bank it could buy and sell any securities issued or guaranteed by the federal government or the provinces.
Finance Department officials said this, besides bringing the legislation up to date, will tend to give influence over prices on the general bond market.

Religious Preacher Causes Uproar In Russian Press

By Richard Kasischke
Moscow, (AP)—The Soviet press has exposed a "base machination"—a young building technician who was a model Communist on weekdays and a religious preacher on Sundays.
The young man, Andrei Semkin, 26, was considered a bright student of materialism and an ardent party member, delivering lectures on Marx-Lenin-Stalinism to his fellow workers on weekdays.
The Literary Gazette exposed his activities in an article entitled "The Preacher of Kolodnya," a small town near Smolensk where, it said, he operated under the noses of local Communist party officials "asleep in their offices."
It told this story:
"One Sunday morning three women appeared on one of the streets of Kolodnya. They weren't like our working women, who usually hurry to work. But their appearance was queer—shawls pulled low over their foreheads, hands crossed on their breasts, a glassy stare in their eyes, they even walked peculiarly.
"The women went into a small house. The small house was packed with people singing religious hymns. . . .
"Suddenly the door opened, and a young man (Semkin) entered. This young man mounted the pulpit and . . .
"His eyes did not speak about the joy of labor. Rolling his eyes toward the ceiling, he said in a quiet, honeyed voice:
"'Dear brothers and sisters! May the bliss in your hearts multiply!'
"The preacher called upon the people to be passive, not to fight, to retreat from life and all surrounding them, to retreat from the common interests and the collectives. He even called on them to pray for their enemies."
Flights Religion
The Literary Gazette joined Komsomol Pravda, Communist youth newspaper, in calling for an intensified campaign against religion especially against letting it entice Soviet youth. It summed up Semkin's case:
"A double-dealer and obscurantist lives for five years among them (Communist party officials) and conducts his base masquerade while party officials are smiling complacently and satisfying themselves with his political notes and his question sheet on Marxist studies. They forgot they must fight unceasingly against those remnants of the past . . . which Semkin sows from his pulpit in Kolodnya."
CARLETON W. I.
The monthly meeting of Carleton Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Morley Murtart on February 8.
Roll call was responded to by 16 members and one new member joined.
The committees gave their reports and school committee reported disbursements brought. Truck committee reported four sick calls made and treats taken. Mrs. Nathan Bell and Mrs. Ralph McCall offered to sew a quilt together and it was decided to quilt.

URGES CHURCHES TO GREATER ACTIVITY

TORONTO, (CP)—A minister of the United Church of Canada said Monday he doubts the church is making even a dent upon the pagan hinterland which surrounds the world of our ivory-towered churchmanship.
Rev. W. G. Berry, associate secretary of the Board of Evangelism and Social Service of the United Church, said: "We do not have a passion for lost souls as our fathers did."
"We are converting few pagans, and changing the lives of not many drunkards and fornicators," he said in a report prepared for presentation to the executive of his board.
The church was not forthright enough in its evangelistic message or in its methods.
He also criticized church members for hiding from "the tragic sexual excesses of our age. In coming to common lack of taste and even pornography."
