Find Battered Old Violin Is Stradivarius

BROWNVILLE JUNCTION, Me. Jan. 18 (AP) — A battered old fiddle that has set the pace for country dances in Northern Maine and New Brunswick is Lloyd Lyons' old-age insurance.

The 62-year-old Canadian Pacific Railway telegrapher discovered that the violin is a Stradivarius. Experts told him it's worth $65,000.

For 20 years Lyons kept the valuable instrument tucked away in a closet. Now it's in a Bangor bank vault—safe from theft or fire.

At the insistence of friends, Lyons took the violin not long ago to Boston experts who told him it was made by Stradivarius in 1721.

"I'd known that for 20 years," Lyons said. "I had it appraised in New York when I was working there."

Lyons said the instrument came to him from his father, Millard, and grandfather, Porter. He found where his grandfather got the violin.

"My father played it all over the country, travelling around with minstrel shows," he said.

Lloyd's son, Robert, who died in 1922, played the violin for years at square dances all over Northern Maine and neighboring New Brunswick. Neither father nor son realized then that it was valuable and took no particular care of it.

In Boston, Lyons learned that a crack had decreased the violin's value between $5,000 and $10,000. He has no plans to sell the instrument. He doesn't need the money now, and it might someday be a boon to his daughter, Patricia, who lives in Bangor.

"I guess I'll just keep it in the bank vault until I get too old to work," he said.

Books, Musical Records Aid In Medicine

IOWA CITY, Ia., Jan. 18 (AP) — Books and musical records as adjuncts to modern medicine which are being used with success at the State University of Iowa hospitals here.

Even persons unconscious from a severe injury such as a skull fracture are subjects to whom "readers" are used as part of a mental conditioning procedure.

Mrs. Leota Stagg, librarian in charge of the "reading therapy" program, says it is based on the idea that a cheerful, happy patient is a better patient and more likely to respond to treatment.

Doctors and nurses were quick to recognize the value of the program, says Gerhard Hartman, superintendent of university hospitals, who explains "its successful application involved close cooperation and study of individual cases."

"Reading therapy" — known formally as bibliotherapy — is especially effective with patients who are depressed prior to major surgery, and with those who have lost use of their legs or arms, Mrs. Stagg says.

For its pioneering work in this field, the hospitals have built up a library of 7,500 volumes and a staff of 14 volunteer workers.

A young woman may read aloud at the bedside of an unconscious patient, Mrs. Stagg explains that often such patients when they regain consciousness, remember parts of the story and ask for the "library lady."

The major use of "reading therapy" however, is for conscious patients who need a psychological assist. The reading helps banish fear.

Paraplegics—those who have lost use of their legs or arms as a result of polio or injury—often pose the greatest challenge.

"Such patients often lose the will to live because their lives have been shattered," Mrs. Stagg points out. "Their therapy program must be well organized, geared toward helping them accept and adjust to their handicap."

Mr. Chappell also told of a comparatively new development in the union, the naming of an educational director. Mr. A. L. Hepworth, who will shortly be visiting all locals to instruct members in the better handling of meetings.

The national president also briefly mentioned the advisability of setting up a Ladies' Auxiliary to better acquaint the wives of union members with the work being done.

Mr. Chappell said that the Union provided its members with a better opportunity for improving working conditions and offered a means for better understanding between employers and employees. He said that close contact with the International Union was necessary as was also a good knowledge of other unions. He favored financial support to other countries as it tended to improve working standards in places where wages are so low as to permit the export from them to this country and thus sell at a lower price than our own people can put the goods on the market.

The meeting yesterday was presided over by Mr. C. MacLean, chairman, who introduced the guest speakers. He also thanked them on behalf of the members for their attendance.

In a brief address Mr. D. N. Second, national secretary-treasurer of the C. B. of R. E. and O. T. W., who told of the past history and growth of the organization. He mentioned the recently completed negotiations between the railway and unions and explained the difference between open and closed shops.
