Author Sees Dief Failure In Self-Charmed Attitude

OTTAWA (CP) — John Diefenbaker won an emotional conquest of Canada in election victories but became a renegade to his own cause and fell from power in a welter of pathetic indecision, writes Peter C. Newman in his new book, Renegade in Power: The Diefenbaker Years (McClelland and Stewart), published this week.

Mr. Newman, an Ottawa editor of Maclean's Magazine, describes his book as a provisional, personal, and entirely unauthorized assessment of Mr. Diefenbaker's career.

"No other Canadian politician in this century could claim the emotional conquest of a generation, yet the prime minister eventually disillusioned his disciples more."

Mr. Newman says in the prologue to his account of the rise of the Prairie lawyer and his subsequent defeat.

SOMETHING WENT WRONG

"Canadian voters thought they recognized in the outraged advocate from Prince Albert, Sask., a man aspiring to become a leader with the clear sense of mission of a Winston Churchill or a Franklin Roosevelt. But once he was in office, something went terribly wrong.

"Elected as a spiritual leader at a time of growing national self - doubt, John Diefenbaker turned out to be no spiritual leader at all, but a renegade in power — a renegade both to his own cause and to the greater aspirations of the nation he was meant to be governing."

The 400-page book is a detailed chronicle based on over 1,000 interviews — some of them with Mr. Diefenbaker himself — and the personal observations of a reporter on the scene of the events. Mr. Newman says his book is "a contemporary journalist's distillation of all the frantic elements — some obvious, some still obscure—that made up the Diefenbaker years."

After winning minority control of the Commons in 1957 and sweeping the country in 1958, Mr. Diefenbaker settled in to enjoy the comforts of office and personal adulation that poured on him, Mr. Newman says. But he began to postpone decisions, fearing that each commitment shaved something off his exercise of power.

The book offers these comments on key figures:

—Davie Fulton, former justice minister and now British Columbia Conservative leader, became disillusioned with government when he collided with former RCMP commissioner L. H. Nicholson on sending reinforcements for the federal police to Newfoundland during the 1959 loggers' strike.

—Donald Fleming, former finance minister now retired from politics, was humbled by demands of the former prime minister and other cabinet ministers for increased government spending and mounting deficits.

—George Hees, former trade minister who resigned on the eve of this spring's election, regarded himself as the crown prince of the party and was the leading member of a group of ministers — whom Mr. Newman numbers as nine or 10 — who attempted a coup d'etat to overthrow the Conservative leader.

—Allister Grossart, former national director of the party and now a senator, is described as the prime architect — to use Mr. Diefenbaker's own word—of the Diefenbaker victory, but in the 1962 and 1963 election campaigns sent instructions to workers across the country reflecting Mr. Diefenbaker's selforiented views rather than those of a hard-headed campaign director.

LOST QUEBEC

Mr. Newman suggests Mr. Diefenbaker's defeat was due to:

1. Loss of support in Quebec, because the Conservative leader showed little appreciation of Quebec's growing ambitions;

2. Disillusionment over Conservative leadership resulting from inept handling of the attempt to dismiss James E. Coyne as governor of the Bank of Canada.

3. The government's confused attempt to play the role of nuclear virgin after committing defence forces to equipment requiring nuclear warheads.

The attempt by dissident ministers to overthrow Mr. Diefenbaker last spring is recounted in chronological fashion, including description of a scene in which Mr. Diefenbaker challenged his cabinet supporters to declare themselves, and when nine held back, declared he would resign in favor of Mr. Fleming.

Alvin Hamilton, then agriculture minister, rallied western MP supporters of Mr. Diefenbaker and was instrumental in encouraging the prime minister to fight off the attempts to overthrow him, Mr. Newman writes.

The book, Mr. Newman says, is an attempt at "catching history on the run," and thus may contain unavoidable omissions and premature judgments.

While the book is highly critical of the Conservative leader for the disillusionment and indecision it attributes to the former government, it praises the Diefenbaker government for its lofty intentions and many of the advances it did accomplish.

Javelin Contract Not Yet Signed

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Attorney - General Leslie Curtis said here no agreement has been signed with Canadian Javelin Limited for the development of timber resources in the Lake Melville area of Labrador, although the government has been approached with a proposal.

Mr. Curtis, acting premier in the absence of Premier Smallwood, was commenting on a report Tuesday that Labrador timber lands "have been subjected to an agreement that they will be ceded" to an affiliate of Javelin.

Mr. Curtis said the government has not made any move on the proposal—it has merely held discussions with Javelin. He said the next move is up to Javelin.

Chinese Mother Issued Visa To Enter Canada

OTTAWA (CP) — Mrs. Loule Yuet - sun, 31-year-old Chinese who left her Canadian son in Ottawa when she was deported to Hong Kong in 1961, will return to Canada Nov. 3.

An immigration department official said here that Mrs. Loule, her husband and two sons in Hong Kong have been issued visas after meeting normal Immigration Act requirements and have completed air travel arrangements.

Ottawa merchant Harry Toy, father of Mrs. Loule, said his family is jubilant over the decision of Immigration Minister Favreau to permit his daughter to return to Ottawa with her husband and two sons to be united with the Canadian son, David, born in Ottawa in August, 1958.

Mrs Loule entered Canada on a non - immigrant visa in December, 1956, to visit her father. She gave birth to a son the following August and the child automatically became a Canadian citizen.

After the birth she sought to have herself declared a legally-landed immigrant. Her application was rejected on grounds that she was a member of a class of persons prohibited entry to Canada at that time.

Post Office Has Annual Auction

OTTAWA (CP)—Bidders at the annual Canada Post Office auction here paid close to $11,000 for 601 parcels of unclaimed merchandise.

The parcels, divided into three categories—general merchandise, hardware and jewellery—contained articles which could not be delivered because of incorrect or incomplete addressing.

Radios, watches, cameras, household articles, clothing and hardware went to the highest bidder for about 10 to 20 per cent less than retail value.

Proceeds from the auction go to the federal treasury, but a post office spokesman said the post office still loses money in handling unclaimed merchandise.

COUNCIL SEEKS OUTSIZE COP

CAPREOL Ont. (CP)— Constable Giles Hamilton who is quitting the local unit has left council with a large - sized problem — who's going to step into his new $200, six-foot four-inch uniform.

"We'd better look for a man six-feet-four if we're going to avoid buying a new uniform," said Councillor Tom Short, who added council had just spent $200 outfitting Hamilton in a new uniform.

"If this keeps up," said Councillor Jim Coyne, "pretty soon we will have more police uniforms than constables."

Capreol is 20 miles north of Sudbury.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X B
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1♥	2♣	Pass	2NT
Pass	3NT	Dble.

Opening lead—king of hearts.

The poker player who boasts he has never been bluffed has his counterpart at the bridge table in the player who claims he never misses a game.

Both styles of play can be expensive, for while such players may scrupulously live up to their reputation, the cost of being it is prohibitive and is bound to show up as a losing policy over the long run.

Our South in the accompanying hand came from this school. While it is true that his two no-trump bid might have led to a successful game contract if North had had a better hand, still South's cards did not justify the optimistic view he took.

South could have passed two clubs or raised the suit in three — and either action would have been moderately acceptable — but the highly aggressive bid of two notrump constituted a gross exaggeration of his values. He needed 2 or 3 points more for this bid.

South was punished far more than he deserved for his optimism, but that is what sometimes happens to players who try to exact every last ounce from each hand through overly aggressive tactics.

West led the king of hearts on which East played the deuce. West shifted to the ten of diamonds, East signaling with the eight when declarer followed low from dummy.

Declarer took the ace and led the jack of clubs and finessed when West played low. East took the king and returned a heart, whereupon the roof caved in. The defence cashed all their hearts and diamonds, as well as the ace of spades, and the result was that South went down eight —2,300 points.

So far as general style is concerned, the best philosophy is to choose a middle ground when it comes to the question of over-bidding or underbidding. There should be a willingness to miss an occasional good game contract, in the interests of safety, and a corresponding willingness to occasionally attempt an inferior game contract. Bidding is not such an exact science that you can always reach the right contract.
