ELLEN'S DIARY

Canada Geese Fly By Honking Their Farewells

"Chicken, Ellen? How nice!" James said. He had come in from a morning spent in choring and tidying about. "Just pottering" as we say. This is a delightful state of service, we find, of much benefit to him-or-her, who is favored to be so engaged, in that it is, by and large a leisurely affair, and also most satisfying because it adds order to the surroundings, and peace to the heart. We think, even to come outdoors to gather up the wind-mapped twigs of the golden willow, our nearest tree-neighbor, can be a wholly pleasant chore. Where else can one catch better the echoes that come in to linger and fade in the quiet of our valley, to leave one much intrigued food for thought? The rumble of a train in today's silence. The insistent sound of a siren out on the Highway. Tractors leading off to the plowing.

"Those stakes we gathered up when we took down the fence so that the machine could get at the stumping, I made them into kindling-wood, Ellen. It will come in handy for lighting the fires in the stove or furnace" James said coming to the table. "And I tidied up ends of our carpentry. . . We still have shingling to do there. I'm wondering . . . but isn't it strange how on a farm, if he cares to look for it, one can always see a number of things to do?"

"That is one of its charms. There's always a work or a pastime" we said. He smiled. "It is a busy life" he nodded. "But isn't it better to have it so, than to be wondering how to put in the time? Then the days would be long, wouldn't they?" he queried.

"Half-way. Come as far as the swing in the birch tree" Peter bargained minutes ago, when the old clock on the shelf had warned him and Alex it was time to turn home.

And how entrancing now the Fall scenes! Commonplace? Perhaps. But never so to this housewife now, or in any season. Today gave the drift of white gulls come up from the River below. They soared to heights, and fell, like so many notes of music, drifting down to gleam on the roof of a furrowed field. A plane, following a route which led from brim to brim of our valley, passed, like a wild duck homing when the afterglow reddened. A broken ruse of Canada Geese, dark against the same brightness, winged by with lingering honks, reminding of a car "piping" a friendly salute, an au revoir, as it rolls down the driveway at parting.

"We're getting remarkably open weather for November," James says, come in now from his busy day. "And this mildness may continue on into the new moon. Have a look to see when that comes, will you, Ellen?"

Teenage Food Favorites Sophisticated Surprise
BY IDA BAILEY ALLEN
"Heavenly!" is a teenage exclamation that applies to almost anything the young generation finds delightful — from the newest fashion haircut to the latest design of the Mamas and the Pappas. It can even apply to food.
Unexpected Choices
When teenage girls are asked for their favorite recipes, most adults would expect an immediate over-supply of wild concoctions. Not so at the Senior Girl Scout Conference on the Home. The girls brought recipes from all over the country, and they turned out to be sophisticated: Dill Mayonnaise from Washington; Great Bay Crab Soup from New Jersey; Mint Green Punch from Ohio; Crawfish Salad from Florida.
So varied were the recipes, and obviously so typical of the level of experimentation going on in American cooking today, that the participants agreed that a collection of them would

Autumn Ceremony Is Held In Fort Augustus Church

St. Patrick's Church was the scene of an Autumn wedding recently when Phyllis Lorraine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Smith, Fort Augustus, was united in marriage with Peter Gerard Callaghan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Callaghan, Lot 65.

Rev. L. P. Callaghan, uncle of the groom, officiated at the double ring ceremony and celebrated the nuptial Mass. Rev. Charles McCarthy and, Rev. James Smith were present in the sanctuary.

The altar was adorned with bouquets of bronze and yellow mums. Bows of white satin ribbon and rose buds marked the guest pews. Appropriate hymns were sung during the ceremony and signing of the register by the Fort Augustus girls' choir.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor length gown of pea de sole, fashioned with Empire waistline, long lily-point sleeves and A-line skirt. Her hair was styled softly from the shoulders. Her four-tiered waist-length veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a crown of pearls. She carried a cascade of deep red roses. Her only jewelry, a cultured pearl necklace, was a gift of the groom.

Janet Smith, sister of the bride, as maid of honor, and bridesmaids, Carol Anne Smith sister of the bride and Mrs. Bruce Pippy, wore identical floor length gowns of Nile green pea de sole, styled like that of the bride. Ring-shaped head-pieces held their veils which matched the color of their dresses.

Darlene Hughes, cousin of the bride was flower girl, wearing a floor length gown of Nile green pea de sole, trimmed with white lace, with matching headpiece. She carried a basket of green and white carnations.

Jamie Smith was ring bearer for his sister.

Gerard Callaghan, brother of the groom, was best man and the ushers were Louis Callaghan and James McDougall.

Mrs. Smith chose for her daughter's wedding, a deep rose two piece ensemble of heavy lace, with black accessories and a corsage of white carnations. The groom's mother wore a two piece burgundy wool suit, black accessories and a corsage of white carnations.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held at the Charlottetown Legion for approximately 60 guests. Mrs. Louis Callaghan circulated the guest book. Adrian Smith, uncle of the bride, acted as master of ceremonies for the occasion and Gerard Murtagh proposed the toast to the bride. For a honeymoon trip to points in the Maritimes, the bride chose a two-piece suit in blue shades of heatherstone, with accessories to complement her outfit. Her corsage was of blue and white carnations.

Mr. and Mrs. Callaghan are now residing in Lot 65. (Photo by A. B. MacKenzie)

MARY HAWORTH

Reader Advised To Be Helpmate Not Nagger

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband, 51, has worked for the same company for 35 years and for the present owner for the last six years.

He has been head supervisor for the past five years, with some 60 co-workers in different categories subject to his direction. Their pay ranges from $80 to $135 a week.

My husband puts in a 56-hour work week on the average, for which he gets a straight salary of $135 a week, that nets us $111-08 in take home pay. The basic carrying costs of our modest home-buying way of life amount to $238.50 monthly, before we consider food, clothing, church contributions, recreation, etc.

The problem always before us is how to stretch his earnings to cover our needs. When he took this job, the company president said my husband couldn't be paid what he should be paid, inasmuch as he's had only a slight grade education.

Don't years of experience, add up to education? If a man is capable of handling responsibilities, shouldn't he be paid accordingly? If he is in fact "the man for the job" and the company's main asset, should he be bargain-rated? What, in your opinion, would be a fair wage for him?

His company responsibilities are many and varied; and at times he is responsible for the whole operation. He works a nine-hour, five day week, plus five hours on Saturdays, and he loves the work. But the strain of worrying about my husband's problems and maybe losing his job if he asks for a raise isn't helping his health.

I say he is underpaid and overworked. He gets an annual bonus of $1,000, less taxes, which comes to $900, and recently got a $1 weekly raise, which adds 15 c. to our take-home pay. But I feel if he were given a better salary he would do a better job and feel better. Please advise.

E. D.

DEAR E. D.: In your letter, here condensed, you ask - in addition to your other questions - how to stretch your husband's paycheck so as to ease the strain on both of you.

The fact is, successful family budgeting, to cover essential spending while permitting the principals to breathe more freely, is a creative continuous learning process, rather than a stereotyped formula.

"What is one man's meat is another man's poison", to quote a proverb, in budget matters.

But to acquaint you with some of the best contemporary guidelines thinking on fruitful low income budgeting, I recommend William J. Whalen's book, "Chris Man Family Finance" (Bruce Publishing Co., Milwaukee, Wis., $2.95).

Equal Pay Is Received For Identical Work

OTTAWA (CP) — Women in the public service take home the same pay-as-men-doing identical jobs, civil service commissioner Ruth Addison assured a joint parliamentary committee on the public service recently.

Miss Addison, replying to a question from Rene Emard (L-Vaudreuil-Soulanges) said "in the civil service we always adhere to the principle of equal pay for identical work."

She said differences in pay between male and female cleaning staff might occur when men were doing heavier or supervisory work.

"In some areas differences might occur because jobs are classified slightly differently. We try to discourage this wherever possible."
