ABOARD THE TRAWLER COVENTRY CITY (Reuters) — This 546-ton British fishing trawler and about 100 others sailing under sealed orders converged on the Atlantic fishing grounds off Iceland Monday.

The trawlers are heading for fishing grounds the Icelandic government has declared off limits effective Sept. 1. In a decision announced in June, Iceland extended its fishing limits to 12 miles from four.

Six nations — Britain, France, West Germany, Belgium, Spain and The Netherlands — have announced that they will observe only the present four-mile limit. The Canadian-born skipper of this trawler, Ivan Barss, 52, has sealed orders on what to do Sept. 1. Five ships of the Royal Navy's fishery protection squadron will be on hand to shepherd the flock of trawlers against any action by the eight small ships of Iceland's coast guard service.

EXPECT SOME FUN
The 19 men aboard the Coventry City said they "expect some fun" on this trip. Barss, born in the village of New Harbor, N.S., has been fishing from Britain for about 30 years.

The trawlers normally are at sea for 19 to 23 days, eight of them taken up by voyaging to and from their fishing grounds.
