

In search of the green

By Inge Dorsey

The January boom for financial aid news have subsided. That leaves me to finally face the mountain of paperwork and filing. These are the much less glamorous duties of the financial aid advisor.

Anyway, on to more important financial aid news. I am seeking the wisdom of the students on suggestions for changes to the Canada Student Loans Program. Are there any areas of the program you would like to know more about? Are you pleased with the system? Are there any areas of the system you would like to see changed? Anyone who has thoughts on this topic will have a chance to immortalize them in ink anytime between February 12th and February 28th, by filling out a brief suggestion sheet either in the Library Lounge or the Dept. of Student Services.

If anyone would like to see me I can be found at the Dept. of Student Services, first floor Main Building, Tues. 11:00 a.m. — 3:00 p.m., Wed. 11:00 a.m. — 1:00 p.m., Thurs. 11:30 a.m. — 3:00 p.m. or by calling 566-0647.

HAVE A GREAT MID-TERM BREAK!

Baha'i

Over the years, people have thought that it is impossible for science and religion to agree or come to a mutual understanding. A large part of this problem has been due to the methods employed by scientists and religionists in their quest for truth.

Human knowledge is based upon four kinds of proofs: (1) sense perception; (2) reasoning faculty; (3) traditional or scriptural authority; (4) the medium of inspiration. Each of these criteria or standards of judgement in which the human mind reaches its conclusions are faulty and inaccurate. They are all liable to error. But a statement presented to the mind, supported by proofs, which the senses perceive to be correct, which reasoning can accept, which is in accord with traditional authority and which is sanctioned by the promptings of the heart can be relied upon as correct, because it has met all the criteria, been proved and tested and found to be complete. However, when only one of the above mentioned criteria has been utilized by itself, alone, the conclusions reached can be dangerous because it ignores either the knowledge of the essence of a thing or the knowledge of its qualities.

Materialistic philosophers have stated that God does not exist because it cannot be perceived by our senses (e.g. sight, touch, etc). Religionists have stated that certain aspects of science are incorrect because it does not correspond with their scriptures. Each of these arguments fail to acknowledge one or more of the criteria or standards of judgement. In each argument either the human element is ignored or the discoveries of the past are ignored.

A cardinal principle of the Baha'i Faith is that science and religion must be in agreement and harmony. This not only includes what has been seen as conflicts (e.g. creation) but the methods employed for discovering what is latent within us. Shoghi Effend, the Guardian of the Baha'i Faith has written, "The Revelation proclaimed by Baha'u' llah, His followers believe to ... scientific in its method, humanitarian in its purpose ... religious truth is not absolute, but relative ..."

Baha'u'llah stressed that personal spiritual development are the fruits only of conscious and deliberate search and struggle, but at the same time, they are "closer than your life vein."

The latest from COPUS, Canadian Organization for Part-time University Students, is that the University of Toronto has recently decided to pay one dollar per student to COPUS.

U of T being one of the largest universities, sees COPUS as a valuable organization for them. Previously U of T had a limit of one dollar or 10% of revenue net to exceed $5000.00 that went to the part-time student organization.

The new decision now allots $11,000.00 to COPUS. The University of Toronto is hoping that other universities will follow suit.

COPUS will need another provincial coordinator as Glenda

MacDonald will be resigning this year. This position will be coming up in June although we will need a delegate before that time to attend the upcoming COPUS conference.

Our monthly meeting will be held Monday, February 24th at 5:30 p.m. in the Mapus lounge in Bernadine Hall.
