Graduation Ceremony At Summerside Airport

Yesterday afternoon number two hangar at the R. C. A. F. station, Summerside, was the scene of the graduation ceremonies, after nine months of air and ground training, for the third post-war class of air navigators. The global-centered wings were presented to the graduates by Air Commodore R. C. Gordon, C.B.E., group commander Maritime Group headquarters. About 11:30 yesterday morning a ground fog settled over the Summerside airport and the aircraft with Air Commodore Gordon aboard, as well as a plane with press representatives from Halifax, had to be diverted to Mount Pleasant. This is probably the first time for a long while that planes have landed at Mount Pleasant, which was a wartime station of the R. C. A. F. After expressing his appreciation for being invited to attend the ceremony Air Commodore Gordon congratulated the graduates and told them not to throw their best books away. That while the R. C. A. F. is necessarily small in numbers it therefore falls on each man to be as effective as possible. The hollow square, composed of officers and air men under the command of Wing Commander D. A. Willis, D.F.C., provided the setting for the presentations. The commanding officer of the station, Wing Commander R. F. Gross is away at present. The graduates now go to Trenton, Ont., to continue their training. Flight Cadet H. L. Broughton of Saskatoon, Sask. was the honor student of the class. The graduates are as follows: F.C. D.S. Wine, Bentley, Alta., F.C. H. R. Witt, Morden, Man., F.C. R. B. Button, 10 Everett Street, Belleville, Ont., F.C. C. J. Bowers, 188 Thompson Ave. E., Transcona, Man., F.C. A.A.D. Cripps Prepares Budget Speech For Next Week

By ALAN HARVEY LONDON April 14 — (CP) — Sir Stafford Cripps came back to London today from the Cotswold Hills with a speech which could win or lose the next election. From his grey-stone country house near Stroud, Gloucestershire, where he has spent the last week working on Britain's next budget, the Chancellor of the Exchequer went to his official residence, 11 Downing Street. There he plans his final fling at the facts and figures he will present to Parliament next Tuesday — proposals whose political impact may be as important as their economic consequences. It will be another austerity budget. Nobody expects anything else. Continued high taxes are certain. Estimated expenditures are as high as ever and Sir Stafford has to raise the money. Despite the secrecy, newspapers are trying to forecast what tax changes, if any, the Chancellor will make. Taxes now rake off some 40 per cent of the national income. The newspaper predictions are that Sir Stafford will rent a little and allow just a glimmer of spring sunshine.

The theory is that the Treasury has to make some concessions or the Government's wage-freeze policy will finally go bust. For two years, Sir Stafford has preached that wage restraint is essential to Britain's economic recovery. The Government policy has been to try to keep both prices and wages from going higher. But prices have edged up and protest against the policy now has reached what many consider to be the breaking point. The New Statesman and Nation, a left-wing weekly, contends in its current edition that "the arguments in favor of lightening the tax burden in favor of the lower-income group appear to be overwhelming."

A government spokesman, while disclaiming any inside information, said circumstantial evidence appears to support the prospect of some small budgetary favors. He said the parliamentary strait-jacket in which the Labor Government now operates may be decisive. A party with a slender over-all majority would obviously be more susceptible to external social and economic pressure than one which could carry out any policy it pleased without fear of defeat.

plan would be more effective than utilizing acreage restrictions. He made the proposal during the throne-speech debate.

as to whether the work of translation should be attempted, or not. However, because of the fact that, unless the writings of St. Thomas were made available in the vernacular, they would remain available only to the few, while they should be the privilege of many, it was decided that the excess potatoes or turn them over to the Government, for diversion uses such as food for needy persons or fertilizer. The first buyer or purchaser of potatoes would be required to withhold this penalty from prices paid for "excess potatoes." If he failed to do so he could be sued along with the grower for the amount of penalty plus interest.

Based On Yield The penalties would apply to the excess above normal yields on allotted acreage or all production from acres above allotments. Ellender explained that a farmer with a fixed acre allotment, based on average or normal yields for the past three years, could use a lot of fertilizer or plant close together and so greatly increase his production. Farmers who opposed the controls still would get an allotment but if they marketed excess potatoes would face penalties on all sales. Unless such penalties were paid off or cleared up at the end of a season, all future production would be subject to penalties. Although potatoes are grown in every State and on most farms, the controls would apply only to "commercial growers" defined as those producing three or more acres for sale. The Secretary of Agriculture could apply controls below three acres if he found it necessary.

Recall Kichham Proposal A proposal for controlling potato production in Canada was advanced in the House of Commons March 6 by T. J. Kichham, (L — Kings). He suggested that the best means of controlling production to avoid surpluses would be for Provincial Governments to impose a levy per acre on each potato grower. He suggested levies ranging from $10 an acre for growers planting from 20 to 35 acres up to $25 an acre for those planting more than 100 acres to potatoes. There would be no levy on growers utilizing less than 20 acres. Mr. Kichham suggested his levy translation be effected. A further consideration that entered into the decision is pointed out by Dr. O'Hanley in his Translator's Foreword to Thomistic Philosophy: "In recent years, the study of Latin has so fallen into disrepute, even to many Catholic schools, that the standard Latin manuals of Philosophy have already become closed books to far too many of our undergraduate students." For making this very important contribution to undergraduate studies in philosophy, Dr. O'Hanley has received the congratulations of many contemporary scholars. Rev. William J. Aldridge, O.P. of the Dept. of Philosophy of De Paul University, wrote: "The books impressed me as being the best by far of all available books (in English), on Thomistic Philosophy." Rev. J. A. Scott, S. T. D., of St. Thomas College, Chatham, praised the work as the best of its kind as a text book in the English language, the answer to the prayers of instructors and students."

Second Printing The first edition of Thomistic Philosophy appeared in three volumes: Logic (Material and Formal) and the Philosophy of Nature (Cosmology and Rational Psychology), were combined in volume one, with Metaphysics (Ontology, Epistemology, and Natural Theology) and Moral Philosophy (Ethics, Economics, and Politics) comprising one complete volume each. (The Guardian has learned that the second printing will be in four volumes, Logic and the Philosophy of Nature each appearing as a complete volume.) The Guardian extends the belated congratulations of its readers to Rev. Dr. O'Hanley for his scholarly accomplishment, and to St. Dunstan's College for its contribution towards uncovering the intellectual light that Prince Edward Island scholars possess, but are too frequently inclined to keep hidden beneath a bushel.

BLIND MAN BUILDS RACING SAILBOAT VICTORIA, April 14 — (CP) — A blind man with only one hand who won international recognition by building an eight-foot yacht tender unassisted, says he's all set to get started on a new and bigger project — a racing sailboat. Arthur Barnes who has taken up boatbuilding as a hobby and operates a confectionery store for a living, says the "Stuka" class sailboat will be started in April and he hopes to complete it in October.
