WEDDING BELLS—A wedding of much interest was solemnized in St. Anne's Church, Hope River, on June 3rd when Lucy Ann, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O. Gallant of St. Mary's became the bride of Mr. Wilfred Dolron, son of the late Francis Dolron and Mrs. Dolron of New Orleans, (Fredericton). Rev. Father W. V. MacDonald performed the ceremony. The bride looked very winsome in a beautiful gown of white satin with white hat and shoes and other matching accessories. She was attended by her sister, Miss Margaret, while Mr. Cornelius Fleming ably supported the groom. After the ceremony the wedding party motored to the home of the groom, where a delectable breakfast was partaken of. After a very enjoyable day spent visiting in the joyable day spent visiting in the city, a sumptuous supper was served at the home of the bride, to the nearest relatives and friends of the contracting parties. The evening was spent in music and dancing. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts at a shower given in her honor previous to her marriage. The happy couple will reside in Fredericton, where Mr. Dolron is a prosperous farmer. Their many friends wish them every success in life.—(Patriot please copy.)

LOCKJAW

Experience taught our forefathers the particular danger of certain wounds. From them was handed down the fear of rusty nails and deep wounds of the hands or feet.

It was in 1886 that the tetanus bacillus, the specific cause of lockjaw or tetanus, was discovered. Subsequently investigators have provided a reasonably satisfactory understanding of this disease.

The tetanus bacillus has a number of unusual characteristics. It is commonly found living in the intestines of normal healthy animals. This explains its presence in stables, barnyards, cultivated soil, animal manure, and street dust.

The tetanus bacillus is one of the few disease-producing bacteria possessing the power to form spores, a resistant dormant state, whereby it may survive, for many years, under adverse conditions that destroy other bacteria.

The poison of toxin which this bacillus elaborates is unusually powerful, and it has a certain predilection for nerve tissues. The tetanus bacillus is called an anaerobe as it flourishes in the absence of oxygen.

With this information as to where the tetanus bacillus is found and as to the conditions which favour its growth, we can understand that any wound which is contaminated with soil should be considered dangerous. Rust is not dangerous in itself, but the rusty nail is more likely to have dirt on it than is the brightly polished nail, hence the bad reputation of the rusty nail.

Deep penetrating wounds, particularly of the hands or feet, and gunshot or powder wounds are serious. Any tetanus bacilli carried into such wounds find therein a peculiarly favourable opportunity for growth, shut off from the air in warm and moist surroundings.

Every wound which is anything more than a scratch requires skilled care. Wounds of the kind described will usually have to be opened in order that all foreign material may be removed. If, every case where there is the slightest cause for suspicion, tetanus antitoxin is given. This is a preventive measure, and it is practically true that it is specific.

The name "lockjaw" comes from the rigidity of the muscles, a symptom of tetanus, which prevents the opening of the jaws. Tetanus has a very high mortality rate, therefore, its prevention is extremely important. Tetanus can be prevented through the proper care of all wounds and the use of tetanus antitoxin.

THE FUTURE OF THE LEAGUE

(The Earl of Lytton, in the London Spectator.)

Addressing the Women's Conservative Association in the Albert Hall last week, Mr. Baldwin said: "If you find that an instrument will not do what you want, it does not mean that your desire is impossible of achievement. What it does mean is that you and all those who succeed you must sit down and examine the instrument, modify, strengthen, alter it, embody in it, if you can, such changes as will make it effective for your purposes." This is very sound and wise, but the metaphor requires some qualification. If you have used an axe to cut down a stone wall and find that the axe is blunted and the stone wall still stands, it would be well to change your instrument. But, if in using an axe to cut down a tree you miss the tree and wound your own foot, the fault is not with the axe, and what is called for is not a change of instrument, but greater skill in using it.

If the operation of the Covenant during the last fifteen years is examined carefully and impartially, it will be found that its failure is not attributable to any error in drafting, but to inadequate application of its provisions. It is not the instrument which has proved faulty, but the people in whose hands it has been placed. The remedy, therefore, is not to re-write the Covenant, but to learn how to use it. If the League consisted only of States that understood the Covenant in the same sense, and were prepared to use it as its authors meant it to be used, it would be found an efficient instrument of peace. Inadequately understood, and inefficiently applied, it has proved a dangerous instrument.

The essential condition of the system of collective security—or, as Sir Norman Angell has more accurately called it, collective defence—is the certainty that an aggressor will meet with overwhelming resistance. In practice, there has been uncertainty on this point from the beginning, and, as the result of the latest experience, this uncertainty has developed into certainty that, if the aggressor is a strong Power, there will be no resistance.

The necessity for a reform of the Covenant is finding expression at the present time in letters to the Press and in debates in Parliament and Mr. Baldwin has said that the Cabinet is devoting serious thought to the problem. "We will try again," he said, "to see where our scheme has gone wrong and where we can accomplish it. To that I pledge my word." The first essential in this review of the League system is to realize the cause of the failure: it did not begin with Italian aggression in Abyssinia, or even with Japanese aggression in Manchuria. Confidence in the efficacy of collective defence began to be shaken before it was ever put to the test. It began with the refusal to ratify the Treaty of Mutual Assistance and the Geneva Protocol of 1924, which were the first serious attempts of the League to enable its members to "make the cause of one the cause of all." Further evidence of the growing uncertainty regarding the operation of the Covenant was provided by the arguments by which the Treaty of Locarno was defended, by the repeated statements of British statesmen that Great Britain was not prepared to fight for the defence of distant countries where her interests were not affected, and by the multiplication of separate non-aggression pacts, none of which would have been necessary if faith in the operation of the Covenant had been strong. The failure to defend China and Abyssinia from aggression only showed that the want of confidence in collective defence was justified.

If the cause of the failure is realized, and the fact that responsibility for that failure is shared by all the States members of the League alike, the right remedies may be

Mystery Surrounds $400,000 Burglary

(A. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) NEW YORK, June 24—Residents of Long Island's exclusive north shore guarded their jewelry boxes to-night following a $400,000 burglary at the palatial country home of William Robertson Coe, sportsman and capitalist.

Coe told police he awoke this morning to find a prowler had stripped his own and his wife's bedroom of jewelry and other valuables during the night. The loot included a pearl necklace valued by Coe at $300,000.

District Attorney Martin Littleton and Police Inspector Harold King questioned 41 persons employed on the Coe estate, including nine house servants, without obtaining a tangible clue. They expressed a conviction it was not an "inside job."
