

Quintuplets Live Birth Still Rare

NEW YORK (AP)—The live birth of quintuplets still is a great rarity, despite a recent increase in multiple births because of new fertility hormone treatments.

Before Saturday, the most recent quintuplets were four girls and boy, born to Mrs. D. W. Lawson of Auckland, New Zealand, July 27, 1965.

There are three other known living sets:

—The two boys and three girls born in 1954 to the wife of Franco Diligenti, a millionaire Argentine industrialist.

—Five boys born Sept. 6, 1964, to Ines Marie Cuervo de Prieto at Maracaibo, Venezuela.

—Four girls and a boy, born Sept. 14, 1964, to Mrs. Andrew Fischer at Aberdeen, S.D.

The five daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne of Calander, Ont., first quint in modern history to survive infancy, were born May 28, 1934. One of them, Emilie, died in 1955.

Mrs. Karin Olson of Alun, Sweden, gave birth to quintuplets in July, 1965, but only one survived.

Is it that nagging backache again?

If it's backache that's bothering you, it could be due to urinary irritation and bladder discomfort. If so, DODD'S Kidney Pills can help bring you relief. The suggested blueprint for future planning on Prince Edward Island is, expected to be in the hands of the government by mid-December. Without looking at it, I know that the report on agriculture will forecast tremendous possibilities for the future. I gather that after talking with George Hunt and hearing him speak to various groups. Some of the more prosperous farmers will go along with that proposal. Some of them are even now reporting enlarged earnings, and planning for bigger and more concentrated activity in the future.

I have no quarrel with such an optimistic outlook. I only hope it correctly forecasts what will happen to farming here. But such a report will be of little value unless farmers who are discouraged now can be taught to be more optimistic; unless substantial financial aid is available for those who can and would enlarge and improve their farming effort. The aid would have to be available at a price this type of farmer can afford to pay.

I don't know how correctly this forecasts what aid is to be available but some people who should know, told me a few days ago that really large sums of money will be available from Canada on future planning and development. These persons added that a larger share of this money, much more than the usual 50 percent, will be available from Canada, and that without a matching amount here. I listened last week to Dr. William (Bill) Jenkins principal of Nova Scotia Agricultural College tell a farm group here that the farmer of the future must be trained - the general idea is that the farmer who succeeds must be college trained, or so I interpreted it. "Even the better farmers now cannot tell their sons how to farm for the future, conditions are changing so rapidly," the speaker said.

I know that many readers will disagree with that, for there is an ingrained distrust of college-trained people in many areas. It cropped out at the Queens County federation of Agriculture meeting. One study group there suggested men working with the departments of agriculture as field men, and also with the experimental farm service, should be older men, with practical farming experience, if they are to win the confidence of the farmers with whom they work.

I don't know how widespread that opinion is today. I know it was widespread when I was a young lad. The "white collar farmer" got little respect in those days.

I remember too that most people seemed to think that men and women "who worked for the government" had an easy time. "They did little but draw their salaries". I soon learned how far off the beam those critics were when I became a newspaperman, and started to talk to, and associate with some of the men who were so criticized.

BIG DEMAND
We hear of the population explosion and the food shortages that is to develop as a result. We're told there will be a tremendous demand for farm products in the future.

And that reminds me of the effort some researchers and manufacturers are making to turn out synthetic products. When I was in Maine a few weeks ago for example, I had dinner with a lady who plans and prepares the meals for a small hospital. She used a product called "Richening" for her tea, and coffee. It is a substitute for cream and it is made chiefly from vegetable oils, the label on the container stated.

The label also stated that it did not contain cholesterol, the substance that has been held up in recent years as a dangerous element in dairy foods. This and other suggestions have done considerable to lessen the sale of some dairy products, though the change has never been proven; at least researchers are unable to agree that dairy products are potential dangers in this regard.

Back to the Nova Scotia Agricultural College and its principal. I am confident that the course made available to future farmers there will be as useful, as interesting and as down-to-earth practical as Bill Jenkins can make it.

I have watched the career of this man through various posts in the N.S. agriculture department, and feel that he comes to this present post eminently qualified to do a really good job. I feel also that Bill Jenkins will do the very best job that is humanly possible.

The new principal is putting tremendous energy into the effort to build up NSAC. He wants it to grow in every possible way. I'm pulling for the man; already there are most encouraging signs of a rapidly enlarging student body.

AID AVAILABLE
Incidentally there are generous aids available to boys who are thinking of a course there. There are at least two practical courses, probably three, in addition to the academic course that leads to degree work. And the practical courses are receiving just as much attention from Dr. Jenkins. If anybody is interested he can receive information from Dave Rogers, F.E.I. department of agriculture from any of the deildmen. It is worth asking about.

Last week I talked with a man who is completing his work for a PhD (doctor of philosophy) degree in agriculture. This man is specializing in animal nutrition. He had correspondence, he told me, with a large Canadian based livestock feed company. He liked the possibilities the company seemed to offer. The company appeared to be most interested in the young nutrition specialist. They were interested, he told me, until they learned that he is 35 years old. They then dropped him just like that.

Just where is this rat race of a chase for youth and younger men going to end. I'm not against youth, I'm all for them, but who ever heard of a man at 35, particularly a fully trained specialist, being too old for consideration as an employee. To me that borders on the ridiculous, or something very close to it.

WINS CHAMPIONSHIP
Robert Batty, Brooklyn, Ontario won the male grand championship in Guernseys at the Royal Winter Fair with Macdonald farms taking the reserve. The grand champion female was shown by a New York breeder, the reserve by Tannery Hill Farms, King, Ontario.

Incidentally, Mary Palmer and Sons, Kensington RR purchased for $1,700 "Tannery Hill Neph-

MALE'S CHAMP at the Guernsey sale of stars. She was the next to the highest priced animal in the sale. She placed second in the 3-year-old futurity class. The top price was $3,100 paid by a Mexico buyer. She was consigned by Pat O'Connor, Cookstown, Ontario.

The champion and the reserve champion Ayrshire cows at the Royal Winter Fair placed first and second in the inter-bred best udder class which reminds me that the Ayrshire cattle pretty well dominated the inter-bred udder class at Halifax earlier this month.

Sydney won the championship with Lou Supreme, the reserve aged class cow. The reserve went to Donald A. MacIntyre, Finch, Ontario with his Doholm Lucky Pretty Girl, who was second in the aged cow class. Judge was Senator Harry Hays.

Glen Cotton tells me that many animals who have been stabled recently have developed pneumonia. Some have been discovered, others have not. But all of the animals will suffer a definite setback, if though they do recover.

Reason for this development, Mr. Cotton explains, is that the animals are housed in buildings that are too warm, and without adequate ventilation. An open door, or a window can provide some of that ventilation, provided, of course, that there are no drafts that reach the animals directly.

Youth Post Holds Meeting

MONTAGUE — Friday was the scene of one of the best meetings, Montague Senior A Allied Youth has had this year.

A member of A.A. spoke to the group, after a sing-song was led by Jill Cudmore. He spoke on the Alcoholic and how he affects the ones around him. He also brought out the various steps which led to alcoholism.

Each committee had a report for the post, and also included the treasurer's report. Richard Collins, advisor, congratulated the committee on a fine evening's program and also the post as a whole for catching the A.Y. spirit more than usual.

Lunch was served at the end of the meeting.
